5. "Dwelling at Jerusalem." Both permanent residents and pilgrims, who had come up to the feast, are probably included, verse 10. At this time there was scarcely a commercial nation under heaven where the Jews had not been scattered for the purpose of trade, merchandise, etc., and from all these nations, it is said, there were persons now present at Jerusalem. The wide list of countries mentioned includes all the lands to which the Israelites had been banished. Representatives from all the twelve tribes listened to Peter's sermon (Acts 2: 14-36), carried back the gospel to their different homes, and were afterward confirmed in the faith by the epistle of James, addressed to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, or are in the dispersion.

6. "When this sound was heard." (R. V.) The sound that came from the upper room. "Confounded." Perplexed, failing to understand what it all meant. See v. 12. "Own language." Or dialect; they heard even the different dialects. See v. 8.

7. "Galileans." Persons wholly uneducated and, consequently, ignorant of those languages which they now speak so fluently.

9. "Parthians." For an explanation of the names in this and the following verses see dictionary.

10. "Proslytes." Heathen who had accepted the Jewish religion.

11. "Wonderful works." Concerning Jesus: His death, resurrection and ascension and His power to save men from sin.

Will the Unnited States have a population of 300,000,000 by the end of the twentieth century? Mr. O. P. Austin, Chief of the United States Bureau of Statistics, in an article in the Forum, answers the question in the affirmative. Mr. Austin very carefully considers the most densely populated districts and countries of the present day, and their conditions, and holds that the United States, with its enormously increasing cultivable area, its resources, its rapid progress in economics and mechanics, will be more able to sustain such a population a century hence than are the prosperous nations of Europe to sustain their population of to-day.

THE minutes of the twenty-ninth annual meeting of the Alabama Press Association just to hand reflect great credit upon the Association and upon the the indefatigable secretary J. A. Rountree, who always takes especial pains with everything connected with the Association. The illustrations of the several officers are especially good and life like, and the report of the proceedings are full and accurate.

THE Constitutional Convention convened at Montgomery on Tuesday, every one of the one hundred and fifty-five delegates answering the roll call. Chief Justice McClellan presided during the enrollment of the delegates. He stated the purpose of the law and said he was ready to perfect the temporary organization. Secretary of State Robt. P. McDavid acted as temporary secretary. In the afternoon a Democratic caucus was held, one hundred and forty-one delegates being admitted, and John B. Knox, of Calhoun, was unanimously nominated for President of the convention; Frank N. Julian, of Colbert, secretary; W. F. Herbert, of Montgomery, assistant secretary; Robert Hasson, of Etowah, doorkeeper, and Thomas J. Fain, of Dale, assistant doorkeeper. On Wednesday morning the convention duly elected the nominees of the caucus, and Pres. Knox made an exhaustive speech to the convention.

The newly elected officers of the convention were sworn in by the president.

The fourteen members who did not go into the Democratic caucus were Messrs. Sloan, of Blount, Reynolds of Chilton, Phillips of Clay, Foshee of Conecuh, Porter of Coosa, Cofer of Cullman, Case of DeKalb, Studdard of Fayette, Byars of Franklin, Mulkey of Geneva, Bartlett of Marshal, Spears of St. Clair, Freeman of Winston, and Williams of Elmore.

The entire proceedings of the Constitutional Convention will be published in The Birmingham Weekly Age-Herald. For a limited time the Age-Herald will be clubbed with this paper one year for the small price of 50 cents for The Age-Herald. Subscribe at once. The Banner and Age-Herald, both papers one year for $1.25.

Confederate Reunion at Memphis.

It is very important that all persons expecting to attend the Reunion in Memphis on the 28th, 29th and 30th of May, make applicaton at once for places where they can be accommodated.

The committee on hotels and Accomodations has made a complete canvas of the city, and they feel justified in saying that they have plenty of room for everyone who will visit Memphis, either in private houses or in public buildings, where cots with pillows, sheets and blankets will be furnished, and where visitors can be made comfortable; but it is very important that the committee on information should know at once about how many people are coming, and the committee earnestly hopes that the people will not wait until the last moment, when they will then come with a rush just before the Reunion, when it will be impossible to wait on them.

OF COURSE WE WILL.

One of the greatest journalistic treats ever afforded readers of an Alabama newspaper is in store for the many readers of the Montgomery Advertiser before and during the Constitutional Convention. Arrangements will be made for handling news during this event on a larger scale than ever before attempted by any newspaper in the South. The Advertiser will present the most complete report of each day's proceedings possible to obtain, giving, in fact, almost every detail in the way of speeches verbatim, committee reports in full, roll call of votes on all questions, and the many general topics of interest throughout the fifty days the session is expected to last, beginning May 21st. This will undoubtedly be an achievement in journalism second to none in the country and certainly an enterprise worthy of patronage by the citizens throughout the State everywhere. We would advise interested readers to get your names on the list in time to begin at the opening. Leave your orders at the Banner office, where they will be forwarded promptly and proper attention given. The Advertiser by mail, Daily and Sunday, at the rate of 65 cents per month.

He Is A Wonder.

All who see Mr. C. F. Collier, of Cherokee, Iowa, as he is now, cheerful, erect, vigorous, without an ache, could hardly believe he is the same man, who, a short time ago, had to sit in a chair, propped up by cushions, suffering intensely from an aching back, in agony if he tried to stoop—all caused by chronic kidney trouble, that no medicine helped till he used Electric Bitters and was wholly cured by three bottles. Positively cures Backache, Nervousness, Loss of Appetite, all Kidney troubles. Only 50c at Clanton drug store.

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the affected parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "SNUFFLES" the GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use

"SNUFFLES" is the only perfect CATARRH CURE ever made and is now recognized as the only safe and positive cure for that annoying and disgusting disease. It cures all inflammation quickly and permanently and is also wonderfully quick to relieve HAY FEVER or COLD in the HEAD.

CATARRH when neglected often leads to CONSUMPTION—"SNUFFLES" will save you if you use it at once. It is no ordinary remedy, but a complete treatment which is positively guaranteed to cure CATARRH in any form or stage if used according to the directions which accompany each package. Don't delay but send for it at once, and write full particulars as to your condition, and you will receive special advice from the discoverer of this wonderful remedy regarding your case without cost to you beyond the regular price of "SNUFFLES" the "GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE."

THE HOME GOLD CURE.

An Ingenious Treatment by which Drunkards are Being Cured Daily in spite of Themselves.

No Nauseous Doses. No Weakening of the Nerves. A Pleasant and Positive Cure for the Liquor Habit.

It is now generally known and understood that drunkenness is a disease and not weakness. A body filled with poison, and nerves completely shattered by periodical or constant use of intoxicating liquors, requires an antidote capable of neutralizing and eradicating this poison, and destroying the craving for intoxicants. Sufferers may now cure themselves at home without publicity or loss of time from business by this wonderful "HOME GOLD CURE" which has been perfected after many years of close study and treatment of inebriates. The faithful use according to directions of this wonderful discovery is positively guaranteed to cure the most obstinate case, no matter how hard a drinker. Our records show the marvelous transformation of thousands of Drunkards into sober, industrious and upright men.

WIVES CURE YOUR HUSBANDS CHILDREN CURE YOUR FATHERS! this remedy is in no sense a nostrum but is a specific for this disease only, and is so skillfully devised and prepared that it is thoroughly soluble and pleasant to the taste, so that it can be given in a cup of tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking it. Thousands of Drunkards have cured themselves with this priceless remedy, and so many more have been cured and made temperate men by having the "CURE" administered by loving friends and relatives without their knowledge in coffee or tea, and believe today that they discontinued drinking of their own free will. DO NOT WAIT. Do not be deluded by apparent and misleading "improvement." Drive out the disease at once and for all time. The "HOME GOLD CURE" is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, thus placing within reach of every body a treatment more effective than others costing $10 to $50. FOR WOMAN'S BENEFIT

Adjusting the Fullness.

Two novelties in the manner of adjusting the fullness in the back are noticeable. For thin goods shirring looks well, and sometimes the box plait is shirred at the top or caught across with three ornamental straps terminating in buttons. The flat back is, however, the most used; but to obviate the stretched, unbecoming look the line back seam springs out suddenly a few inches below the waist, imparting a becoming amplitude.—Dry Good Economist.

No Longer in Trade, But Useful.

The Countess of Warwick, who so shocked British society by opening a lace shop in Bond street, London, has sold her lace and lingerie business and retired from trade. She is now devoting her time and her fine talents to promoting the education and welfare of country working girls. A rich dowager, whose name thus far has been kept a secret, gave her $500,000 to carry on this work. The countess is establishing schools, homes and boarding houses for the girls, where they are safe and enjoy many advantages.—Woman's Journal.

Fine Embroidery Much Used.

Experts in fine embroidery have their hands full at present. Hand embroidery figures conspicuously on the new gowns, and the dressmakers are striving vainly to find workers who can do the artistic tasks required.

Fine lingerie, too, calls for an infinite amount of dainty hand embroidery, and even when the trimming is in lace and insertion there is at least an elaborately embroidered monogram on the under garment.

In Paris the monogram is not the last note of fashion in lingerie making. The French woman now prefers to have a symbol in place of her monogram, and racks her brain for an effective device that will in some way suggest her personality.

Mother and Child.

The ideal mother, like the ideal teacher, is an artist rather than a scientist; and although she bases her art upon a knowledge of underlying scientific principles, her skill is shown in producing effects which are apparently natural and unstudied. She keeps herself in the background, providing opportunity for the observation of desirable objects and activities, and allowing the child to do his own observing.

She leaves him free to follow his own impulses, and if the impulse is leading him astray, she manages to suggest a thought which turns it in a new direction. In conversation she lets the child lead, answering his questions and responding sympathetically to his comments, thus awakening in him the new thought which naturally grows out of the old. She remembers always that it is the child who must do the growing—that when she has expended the utmost care and thought upon his environment, when she has tried to discover and to provide the surroundings which will best promote his physical, mental and moral growth then she must stand aside to wait and watch while his life unfolds freely and spontaneously from within.—Rosemary Baum, in Harper's Bazar.

Queen Alexandra's Companion.

A very plain and unpretentious woman occupies today in England, a place which the first ladies of the land might well desire. Miss Knollys has for years been the companion and trusted friend of the Princess of Wales, and now has as much influence with Queen Alexandra as any women in England.

The princesses are devoted to the gentle little woman, and the king is her good friend. It is said that King Edward will make her a peeress, in her own right, so that she may be eligible to one of the high places near the person of her majesty.

The question of places in the new court is causing many heart burnings, and, although the new sovereign is too tactful to make speedy and sweeping changes, there are removals and rumors of removals. Some of the old incumbents have been pensioned. Others who do not need pensions, have simply been dropped.

One of the two East Indian attendants, who always assisted Queen Victoria to and from her carriage, has already gone back to India, and it is said that the other will follow. As a matter of fact, little that is definite is known about the prospective changes.

The stock of presentation jewels and trinkets marked "V. R. I.," which was left by the late queen is being conferred, by King Edward, upon his mother's friends and servitors.

A New Occupation for Women.

A woman who has lived in Washington for years and but lately removed to New York City found herself obliged to earn money.

One day a woman who holds a position in a banking house was bewailing her lot at lunch time.

"I am often so busy," she said, "when noon comes that I cannot leave my desk to go to some restaurant, and I am often obliged to wait for a bite until 2 or even 3 o'clock. If I could only have a lunch, say a sandwich, a piece of cake and a glass of milk brought in to me I know I should be in better health.

"I get so faint about 12.30 that it often brings on a headache, and by the time I get out I have lost all desire to eat."

Now the woman put on her thinking cap and remembered having heard that a woman in Washington was going around among the government clerks serving a dainty lunch every day between 12 and 1 o'clock to those who did not care to go out or who could not leave their desks.

She obtained permission from the superintendent of one of the largest buildings down town to canvass among the women employed in the offices and find out if this really was a want, and if so if it would pay her to cater to it.

Her canvass resulted in obtaining almost 100 customers in that one building. She furnishes a lunch consisting of two sandwiches, one of meat, the other of lettuce, cheese or sardines, a couple of liberal slices of home made cake and a glass of milk put up in a small bottle, which is returned the next day.

These little lunches are nicely done up in white paper, served at 12 every day and cost 15 cents. She employs two boys to deliver the lunches, which she puts up in her own apartment.—New York Herald.

Beautifying the Simple Parasol.

The deft-handed woman who aspires to pretty parasols, but does not care to spend a fortune on them, will be a busy and a happy creature this season. Most of the summer styles in sunshades lend themselves easily to partial reproduction by the clever amateur. For instance, sunshades of plain silk are trimmed with graduated rows of black velvet around the edge. The effect is charming, and the sunshade thus trimmed is a third again as expensive as the same sunshade untrimmed. Any clever woman accustomed to "fixing" and fussing can trim her sunshade of pink or blue, lilac or white silk, to look exactly the same as the Paris importation. Another fancy is lines of narrow black velvet running up from the outer edge toward the centre of the parasol. Between each pair of ribs are from five to seven lines of velvet, the centre one reaching half way toward the tip of the parasol, the others being quite short. This effect is very pretty and when closed the sunshade looks like a handsome striped silk. A simple black velvet ribbon edge is effective on a parasol of pale hued silk, and this is a "wrinkle" of the season and very easy to add to one's modest priced parasol.

Even the splendiferous lace and chiffon creations can be further glorified by the amateur, and yet not wear a home-made air. Many of the most costly parasols owe their nonchalant elegance to the careless bunch of roses or the big chou of ribbon at one side. These can be added by the least skilful of parasol owners, as can also ruchings of chiffons, applique motifs of simple design and frills of lace. Neat stitches, patience and care are the principal requisites to the beautifying of the simple parosal and the consequent mystification of the world—for, of course, the chief joy of having an artful sunshade lies in its power to make the world gape admiringly at one's magnificence, and to be blissfully aware that the admirers do not know that one did not pay an exorbitant price for one's beauty and fashion.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

FASHION NOTES

Tailor made gowns of silk are one of the season's demands.

Renaissance and mercerized grenadines are among the new thin cotton materials.

Shirred yokes are features of thin frocks, and they will be built over colored foundations.

"Tantivy Croat" is the name of one of the new neckties made of mercerized cheviot to wear with the outing shirts.

As the season advances the odd blouse is more in evidence. Thin stuffs shirred in diamonds, marked off with narrow black velvet ribbon, constitute yokes and undersleeves.

Black velvet belts and stocks are worn with colored shirtwaists. A novelty is a narrow white pique belt, stitched and made with silver eyelets and a plain buckle, to fasten like a leather strap.

Corselet belts prove so becoming that they are almost universally worn with any sort of bolero. They are almost as much trouble to make as a bodice, for they require to be boned and fitted with great exactitude.

Linens and wash materials of all kinds built on severe tailor line, will be fashionable this summer. The plain linens and piques, as well as figured, will be made without trimming of any sort, save the folds or bands of the same material as the gown.

Pretty white gauze scarfs dotted over with printed flowers in natural colors add novelty to the department devoted to neckwear. Scarfs of every kind are in demand, and another pretty variety is in thin white silk with chine borders. Others are striped with cashmere designs.

The most charming dotted swisses are now shown in all the shops. They come in pastel gray with white lozenge shaped dots, in bonbon green with white dots and serpentine stripes, in maize yellow with black lacy stripes that look like insertion, in violet, black and white, and a variety of lovely shades and tasteful designs.

ELEPHANTS IN THE BRITISH ARMY.

Highly Trained Brigades For a Great Variety of Work.

One of the most interesting features of the English army life presented to the layman in India is furnished by the remarkable efficiency of the elephant brigade, most highly developed through the skill of the Burmese in handling the giant animals. Their usefulness in Indian can scarcely be imagined by one not familiar with the amount and variety of work which they accomplish, but it would be a serious mistake to imagine that this degree of usefulness is attained through any aptitude of the unwieldy animals or natural tendency toward it. It is due solely and entirely to the wonderful ability of the natives in training the huge animals and overcoming their natural inclinations. This cannot be too highly praised. Neither must it be imagined that the use of elephants in army life is not attended by great disadvantages, not the least of which is the difficulty with which they are transported. Naturally the elephant is not an intelligent animal. He can be taught remarkable things, in which his strength and endurance play an important part. He can never, however, perform these feats without continual attendance and direction. Abstractly, his power of work is finappreciable; when directed by skilful hands, however, it is remarkable.

The transportation facilities which are provided for the sole use of the elephant are quite as remarkable. I witnessed recently, adds the writer, the loading and detraining of a lot of elephants on the Madras Railway. Both were remarkable processes. In loading, a rope is fastened to his foreleg, and a lot of natives haul and pull at it to induce the animal to take the first steps into the car. This is only accomplished, however, by admonishing him in the haunch by means of a tusk. The first step taken is rapidly followed by the others, until he stands safely on the car. This portion of the task is accomplished comparatively easily, however, when compared with the next. At first he is timid and slightly frightened, but when the car starts his fear is wonderful to behold. Though he may ride a hundred times, he never overcomes this fear, though it is much more pronounced when he takes his initial ride after, say, two months' acquaintance with civilization. He rends the air with wild trumptetings, endeavors fruitlessly to escape, and only ceases his efforts when the car has again come to a standstill. In transporting the elephants by sea the difficulties are almost as great. They are raised by means of a canvas sling from the wharf to the ship, struggling to escape and rending the air with their cries. Once aboard ship they are easily managed, the motion not affecting them, because they do not see the moving panorama before them. Unloading them is easy. They are lowered to a raft beside the ship and allowed to swim ashore. They take to the water easily and are excellent swimmers, being able to swim eight or ten miles at a stretch without tiring.—The Regiment.

Bridget's Grievance.

The wife of a clever detective is said to have powers nearly equal to those possessed by her husband. Not long ago she began to notice that dimes and quarters were daily disappearing as if by magic from the "change purse" in which she kept silver for small purchases. She was inclined to suspect one of her two maids, a sullen Irish girl, but was unwilling to accuse her. After some thought she wrote on a slip of paper, "Neither Bridget nor Celia must take any money from this purse." This slip she put into the purse with some silver, and awaited developments.

Two days later Bridget came to her and gave "warning."

"What is the matter?" asked her mistress, innocently.

"I'll be going to another place," said Bridget, vindictively, "and it's yourself that knows the rayson. I'll not stay in a house where I'm accused of stealing money out of a little ould purse that's nivver had more than two dollars in it since I took service here"—The New Yorker.

Heard Them, Anyhow.

A musician and his wife were on their way home from a concert, and were overheard discussing the merits of the entertainment.

"It set my teeth on edge," the husband said, "to hear the orchestra playing 'Yankee Doodle' and 'Dixie' at the same time. The idea is all right, of course, and even commendable from a sentimental point of view, but the two pieces, when played together, are full of discords."

"But didn't you notice," said his wife, who is something of a musician herself, "that where certain notes or passages would have been discordant they were omitted from one air or the other, and left to the drums?"

"Of course I noticed it," he testily rejoined, "but I could hear the discords in my mind just the same! Ach!"—Youth's Companion.

Reindeer Flesh For Food.

It is stated that a strenuous attempt is being made by some enterprising Norwegians to popularize reindeer flesh as an article of diet in Europe. The experiment of raising the animals in large numbers for slaughtering purposes will be fairly tried. They expect to find profitable markets in France and Belgium, and will even endeavor to induce beef-eating Britons to purchase the article.

You are having good luck enough if your friends never hear the mean things you say about them.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The air is so clear in Zululand that objects seven miles away can be distinctly seen by starlight.

Germany has the advantage of the United States in the export of hair and wigs. In fact she almost entirely supplies this country with the commodities named.

Kansas statisticians figure that every baby is worth $1000 to the State. This estimate seems absurdly inadequate to the baby's parents.

The editor of Burke's Peerage, London, says that he receives more inquiries about questions of precedence from the United States than he does from England.

Two thousand tons of American rails recently arrived in England. They show the lines on which the industry of this country is beginning to make tracks there.

A notable falling off in the attendance at several Brooklyn schools for girls has, on investigation, been attributed to the attractions of cheap theatres and regular matinee performances.

The British Government has gone into the show business by giving in the town halls of England, by means of moving photographs and patriotic music, illustrations of army life calculated to make young men desire to become soldiers.

In this day of extraordinary faith in the efficacy of combinations marriages ought to be more popular. If two corporations which could not earn dividends when separate can be made a very valuable and productive property when united, almost any sort of men and women ought to be of more use to the world married than single, suggests the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Under a rule recently adopted by the Board of Education of New York City school children will no longer be allowed to give presents to their teachers unless the gifts shall be sent anonymously to the teachers' homes. The object of the new regulation is to put an end to favoritism in the public schools, charges having been made that certain teachers were partial to the children of well-to-do parents because of the presents which such youngsters brought them.

When Dr. Garcia-Meron was Argentine Minister at Washington he became much impressed with the superiority of American agricultural methods. He has now been made Secretary of Agriculture in Argentina, and one of his chiefs plans is to study American methods exhaustively. For this purpose his Government is sending twenty-five men to this country to investigate everything of interest in connection with agriculture here, and ten American agricultural experts are to go Argentina to take charge of local work in the various Argentine States.

Travelers crossing the Campagna and other low-lying parts of Italy need not be surprised to encounter formidable-looking masked men, who make free of the railway trains. The order has gone forth that all trainmen while crossing certain designated parts of the country shall wear masks and gloves, which will make useless all attacks of the mosquitoes. This order is the result of the very fruitful experiments made on the Campagna last summer, when it was proved beyond all per-adventure that the malaria which has made then practically uninhabited is caused solely by the bites of the mosquitoes. The Government, therefore, has taken upon itself to protect its employes. Why would it not be a fair and equable plan to supply the travelers with masks, too?

It is no trivial achievement to run the street cars of Oakland, Cal., by electric power generated on the Juba River, 140 miles distant. Since this can be done, there is every reason to expect that electricity may be transmitted almost any distance. Scientists who have deplored the utter waste of the force of ocean waves may look forward to the time when that force will turn mill machinery, run street cars, light the streets and otherwise serve the needs of remote communities. Indeed, an invention has been patented for collecting the power of the waves. On the Juba turbine wheels are used to generate the power, which is transmitted by means of a copper cable six-tenths of an inch thick.

Who thinks of the United States as a large importer of agricultural products? Will not the statement that its importations of foreign-grown products exceed in value all its vast exports of grain of every kind, including wheaten flour, by $170,000,000 excite surprise? Such is nevertheless the fact. The United States Department of Agriculture's report states the total value of the principal agricultural imports for the year that ended June 30, 1900, at $420,139,288. Our combined exports of cotton and cereals for the same period were valued at $403,000,000, using round figures. The total value of all our agricultural exports for that year was $844,616,530, so that the American people are buying very nearly half as much farm and plantation produce from foreigners as they are selling to them.

Is it not true? Women suffer, feel the very life crushed out of them, grow old before their time. Each morning wake up determined to do so much before the day ends and yet—

Before the morning is very old the dreadful BACKACHE attacks them, the brave spirit sinks back in affright, no matter how hard they struggle, the "clutch" is upon them and they fall upon the couch crying:

"Why should I suffer so? What can I do?"

The answer is ready, your cry has been heard, and a woman is able to restore you to health and happiness.

Backache is only a symptom of more fatal trouble—heed its warning in time.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will stop your torture and restore your courage. Your pains come from unnatural menstruation or some derangement of the womb. Let those who are suffering read Mrs. Morton's letter and be guided by her experience.

AN OPEN LETTER TO WOMEN.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I have been so delighted with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I thought I would write and thank you. My system was entirely run down. I suffered with terrible backache in the small of my back and could hardly stand upright; was more tired in the morning than on retiring at night. I had no appetite. Since taking your Compound I have gained fifteen pounds, and am gaining every week. My appetite has improved, have no backache, and I look better than I ever looked before.

"I shall recommend it to all my friends, as it certainly is a wonderful medicine."—MRS. E. F. MORTON, 826 York Street, Cincinnati, O.

When a medicine has been successful in restoring to health more than a million women, you cannot well say, without trying it, "I do not believe it will help me." If you are ill don't hesitate to get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once, and write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for special advice—it is free.

The Mexican government has granted concessions for boring for petroleum in various parts of the republic, exempting the new industry from taxation for ten years. Free importation of tools and machinery is granted.

Welcome News.

There will be a boom in South Africa before many weeks. Johannesburg is gradually filling, the mines are resuming, and arrangements are making for the reorganization of the municipal government.

Recently Attempted Suicide.

A story is current that Queen Draga of Servia took poison when the king recovered the situation caused by the conflicting statements regarding her health and that she is dangerously ill in its effects.

His Initial Performance.

King Alfonso last Thursday for the first time took a prominent part in the annual maneuvers of the Madrid garrison. He appeared on horseback accompanied by General Weyler, minister of war, General Martinez, captain general of Madrid, all the marshals resident at the capital, and a numerous and brilliant suite. The young ruler remained in the saddle for five hours and took the keenest interest in the operations. Both the troops and spectators gave the King an enthusiastic reception.

Unreasonable Turkey.

The Turkish customs authorities have prohibited the entry of typewriters into the country and 200 machines now in the custom house have been ordered returned to the consignors. The authorities take the peculiarly Oriental attitude that there is no distinct feature about typewriting by which authorship may be recognized or a person using a machine be traced, and that consequently any one would be able to put in type seditious writings without fear of compromising himself. Hectographic paste and fluid are also prohibited for similar reasons. The embassies are making efforts to induce the government to take a more reasonable attitude.

Secretary Hay's proposal for a new Nicaragua treaty was received from Lord Pauncefote late last week in London. It is a voluminous document and is being printed. It is described as a redraft of the Hay Pauncefote treaty, with what appears to be extensive annotations. Several weeks are likely to elapse before the cabinet can commence its discussion. The dispatches relative to the possibility of the substitution of the Panama Isthmian route are read with interest. The Associated Press learns that agents of the Panama company have not approached the British government, but if the United States should think it advisable to complete the Panama canal the decision would be hailed with no little satisfaction at the foreign office as an easy way out of the controversy. The British officials are without accurate knowledge of the terms offered by the Panama people and adhere to the belief that the United States will not choose this route. "If it is advisable to abrogate the Clayton-Bulwar treaty on account of its age," says a high official, "how much more is it necessary to annul the French Canal agreement, which was made long before the Clayton-Bulwar treaty." Inquiries reveal the fact that negotiations to this end are progressing, though slowly. France is said to be exhibiting a genuine desire to have the matter settled and at the expense of concessions in other parts of the globe, Great Britain may endeavor to meet her views.

Senator Kearns and wife, of Utah, and Senator Clark of Montana, are spending on a tour of the Mediterranean. Perry S. Heath, secretary of the republican national committee, their wives, with railroad ventures in the east, joined the party at Rome, returning with them.

Negotiations are progressing between Canada and the United States by which the latter may acquire the British West Indies, at the price of $4,000,000. The Danes are to trade under the same tariff as the Americans.

Their Island Prison.

No doubt now exists as to Boer prisoners being sent to the Bermuda islands. The British steamer Cayo Romano, which sailed from London May 2nd for New Orleans, by way of Bermuda, is discharging large numbers of tents, stoves, utensils, stores and bedding, many of the articles being marked "for Boer prisoners."

THE OPTIMIST.

I thank my lucky stars I'm not

When baggagemen destroy my trunk
I do not rave and rant,

My walk, I smile and think, "'Tis well

"It's hard," said the menagerie lion. "What's hard?" asked the kangaroo. "To be starved when I'm alive and stuffed when I'm dead."

"Plumbers are terrible in their charges aren't they? They omit nothing." "That's their reputation." "Here's one who charged his victim with finding fault with his bill."

"Is he weaker mentally?" asked the bustling stranger. "No, he's away off in Alaska," replied the assistant. "I knew he was away off somewhere," said the stranger as he bustled out.

The illustrator was looking over the proof sheets of the popular novelist's work. "She swept up the street with haughty tread," he read. "Well, I guess I'll have to draw her with one of those long trains," he mused.

"I wonder if all men are fools," snapped Mrs. Enpeck during a little domestic tiff the other morning. "No, indeed, my dear," replied her husband. "I know a number of men who are bachelors."

"Dis is terrible," said Meandering Mike, with a deep-drawn sigh. "What's de matter?" asked Plodding Pete, in alarm. "Here's a piece in de paper. It says we've got muscles inside of us that keeps up an involuntary action. Dey goes on workin', whether we wants 'em to or not."

The husband of the society woman looked up from his paper. "I see in the society column that you were at home yesterday," he remarked. "Yes, dear," replied the society woman. "Well," he muttered, "I know it's quite unusual for you to be at home, but I can't for the life of me see why the newspapers should comment on it."

Japanese Housekeeping.

Even the highest-class Japanese women have their household duties to perform, and no matter how rich the family, Japanese girls are brought up to be able to sew, cook and attend to their homes.

In Japan the higher-class women never go to market. The market comes to them—that is, the dealers call, and offer wares for sale at their customers' doors. The fish merchant brings his stock, and if any is sold prepares it for cooking. The greengrocer, the sake dealer and nowadays the meat man all go to their patrons' houses.

Nearly all Japanese women make their own clothes; at all events, even the very richest embroider their garments themselves. They are very economical little dressmakers and do much planning, cutting, basting and making over.

Dinner is served at or a little before dusk the year round. A small table about one foot square and eight inches high is set before each person. On this is a lacquer tray, with space for four or five dishes, each four or five inches in diameter. There are definite places for each little bowl and dish. The rice bowl is on the left, the soup bowl in the middle. One's appetite is measured according to the number of bowls of rice one eats. A maid is at hand with a large box of rice to replenish the bowls. If a few grains are left in the bottom of the bowl she is aware that those eating have had sufficient, but should one empty his bowl she will once more fill it.

How Nails Were Named.

Two accounts are given of the term "sixpenny," "eightpenny, "tenpenny," and so on, as applied to the various sizes of nails. According to one statement, when nails were made by hand, the penny was taken as a standard of weight, and six were made equal to the weight of a copper penny. This explanation is open to criticism on account of the very small size of the nails, of which six were needed to balance even the large-sized old fashioned copper penny. Others are much more probable. One explanation holds that tenpenny nails originally sold for tenpence a hundred, sixpenny nails for sixpence a hundred, and so on, the smaller nails selling for the lower price. Another explanation is that 1000 nails of the tenpenny size used to weigh 10 pounds, 1000 of the sixpenny size six pounds, and so on for other sizes. Of the ordinary sixpenny nails there are 80 to the pound; of the eightpenny there are 50; tenpenny, 34; twelvepenny, 29.—The Book World.

AN UNFORTUNATE INDIAN.

Tragic Fate of the Only Red Man of Little Muddy.

The city of Little Muddy, on the Upper Yellowstone, was an exceedingly wideawake town in '87. When it had reached the mature age of three months every kind of business man was represented except the cigar dealer, and the next week a man from Chicago named Clark opened a tobacco store, with a large, gaudy and aggressive wooden Indian in front, holding a tomahawk savagely in one hand and a bunch of cigars in the other. Gentlemen not unconnected with the stock growing industry who came in from the ranges wearing spurs and weapons would resent his threatening attitude. He was knocked off his pedestal half a dozen times a day, but did not meet his Waterloo until Tobe Hartely and friend, Long Isaac, came in town from Lightning's Nest neighborhood. It was their first vacation from the ranch in several weeks. They wandered about town in a receptive mood and sought to enjoy their visit. Finally, they separated, and Tobe, coming along to the Indian and not noticing his upraised hatchet, sat down at his feet to rest. He soon fell asleep and sank lower. At this juncture Isaac came around the corner and took in the situation at a glance. "Killed my partner for a simple bunch of cigars, did you!" he cried. "Well, we'll see about it!" and he produced his firearms and began shooting accurately and rapidly. At the end of ten minutes Stark gathered up his noble savage in a basket, while the resuscitated Tobe and the avenging Isaac moved off arm in arm.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Sees, and Some [illegible] Saw But

This is an unexpected and [illegible] we are having and [illegible] it will be [illegible] done, [illegible] to crops. [illegible] nature [illegible] don't [illegible] the end of May and [illegible] are [illegible] weeks being wet and [illegible] to not good [illegible] Here's hoping [illegible] the best.

I am glad to learn there is a fair prospect for the establishment of a bank at Clanton. Some time ago we nearly had a bank established here, but for some reason or another it fell through. Now I understand some capitalists are figuring on the business that could be done here and if satisfactory arrangements can be made the bank will go. There is undoubtedly a fine opening for such an institution here and I wish it all possible success.

Building operations are engaging the attention of our people largely these days. The four brick stores opposite the court house are rapidly going up. Mr. Moody is a busy man and keeps things moving. The foundations are being dug for the addition to Pinckard's store, which will make it one of the largest mercantile establishments between Montgomery and Birmingham. Dr. E. A. Matthews has purchased the Albert Headley lot next to the depot and will take the old wooden structure down, replacing it with a two-story brick. This will be a vast improvement to that end of town. T. A. Curry's handsome new residence is approaching completion. G. Higgins is just finishing a cottage on his lot near the railroad. Judge Adams is building a new buggy house and N. A. Kicker is getting the lumber on his lot for a similar purpose.

Judge Adams has bought a new pair of horses, and Dr. Winchester delights his friends with his spick and span turnout. Clanton is showing up well with its swell turnouts. The world do move and so does our town. Fine women and fine horses is the boast of Kentucky and so is it of Clanton.

Burwell.

Quite a crowd snap visited their parents on Sunday and Monday, making cotton look sick.

L. H. W. Jones has located in this settlement.

The readers of the Banner will remember when the question of stock law was being agitated for Chilton county of seeing a very bitter piece against it from Burwell, the only gentleman from Burwell that said anything for publication against the stock law. But now, my friendly reader, since this gentleman has found out that it was Democrats that perpetrated the dirty deed that forced the stock law on the people he is than ever ready with the aid of the black hoofed editor to jump on the poppers and call them by absurd names and say their writing is too absurd for reflection, for no other cause than they complain 'b'cause they have been robbed.

The singing at Canaan was a success Sunday.

The great Democratic lion roared last a little last week; guess his friends have decided to set him up on a donkey so he can be represented, as he still tries to retain the name. BILLY THE KID.

It Saved His Leg.

A. Danforth, of Lagrange, Ga., suffered for six months with a painful running sore on his leg; writes that Bucklen's Arnica Salve wholly cured it in five days. Ulcers, Wounds, Piles, it's the salve in the world. Cure guaranteed. Only 25c. Sold by all druggists.

Mr. T. U. Crumpton lectured in the Baptist church here last Sunday on what he saw in the Holy Land. The audience gave him close attention for two hours; we think Mr. Crumpton is doing a noble work, which our people should duly appreciate.

Mr. Posey's little girl who had been sick with pneumonia died on the 18th. We deeply sympathize with the sorrowing parents.

The Mars Hill community met last Saturday and decorated the graves of their loved ones. Several of the Macedonia people attended the service.

Mr. E. G. Cofer has his saw mill rebuilt. Messrs. J. P. Nix and J. L. Waldrup, Sr., have gone to Memphis. R. J. Langston conducted a song service at Mars Hill on the 25th. x.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE

The Institute met at Jemison on May 24th and 25th inst. in full glee, quite a number of teachers were present, although there were room for more.

Supt. Moore opened Institute with a song by the Jemison choir and prayer by R. A. Rasco, after which the subjects were taken up in regular order, and each thoroughly discussed. Although a number of teachers to whom the subjects were assigned were absent, yet those who were present showed their kindness and willingness by taking hold of those subjects and discussing them. All that were present seemed to have come for no other purpose but to do good and receive good. No teacher can be interested in his work unless he attends these Institutes; everyone is more or less benefitted. Therefore we beg every teacher to attend the Institutes.

Prof. Collier, who is the Principal of the Jemison High School, was indeed very kind, also the people of Jemison. Each teacher was assigned a home and each one highly entertained.

We thank the book drummers, Messrs. Smith, Ross, Bowery, Zberkly and Morris for their good speeches, each one gave us some new ideas, and we hope the committee will share with them all.

The Institute closed, hoasting the next Institute at Macedonia in September, with the following resolutions:

Whereas, the good people of Jemison have so kindly and cordially extended to us, as teachers of Chilton county, a hearty welcome to this town and to their homes, where we have especially enjoyed ourselves while in their midst, and also very highly entertained by Prof. Collier's school.

Resolved, That we extend to the people of Jemison and to Prof. Collier and wife our most sincere and heartfelt thanks for the kind reception and pleasant entertainment which they have given us.

East Chilton

We had another fine rain Saturday; farmers are looking bright, but the cold weather Sunday caused some of them to put on a long face; crops are looking fine.

Mr. J. N. Goss has returned home from Jemison where he has been going to school; his many friends greet him on his return.

Mr. Williams, of Deatsville, has moved to the Conn place near Burwell.

Some of our people attended the singing at Salem Sunday, report a nice time.

We are sorry to say some of the boys were disappointed in their expectations.

Some of people are anticipating a nice time at the singing at Coosa river next Sunday.

We are sorry to say E. A. Norris has a sick child. N. J. Jones is also very sick.

We were surprised Sunday when the sad news came from Prattville that Miss Belle Dennis was dead. We sympathize with the bereaved parents.

J. N. Goss will soon be in possession of a nice buggy. Look out girls.

I guess Billy the Kid is resting his lungs, as he failed to bleat last week. I reckon he is exhausted; I think it takes two of the kids to do the bleating anyway.

SAME OLD IKE.

Dr. Tichenor's Antiseptic smells like peppermint candy, and is "just as good," but for a different purpose. Try it next time you get hurt or have Colic. Only 50c a bottle at drug stores.

Cedar Grove.

We are having some nice overcast weather that is causing the little truck to crouch up as though it was shaking with an "ager."

Our meeting was a grand success, as a result an old wrangle (or disturbance) we have had in the church for quite awhile was settled.

U. S. Deputy Marshal Felix Dudley has been round gathering up a lot of our boys and carrying them to the capital city lately.

Mr. Willie Hill and his cousin, Miss Katie Hill, of Salem, attended singing at the church Sunday.

We learn by close observation that Harvey Wilson is not the only fellow who has been given the G. B. lately.

Mr. Bill Hayes, of Blocton, visited his father at this place. Mr. Hayes that man's trouble with women began in an ancient garden and now he stands and wonders where it will end.

Messrs. Henry Eiland and Harvey Wilson were visiting near Salem Sunday, where we learn they lost their hearts, and were seen among some of the former keepers of them (their hearts) Sunday night trying to get a good description of them. You may see their a-s soon.

ALL DAY SINGING.

The second annual singing convened at Salem church, Sunday, May 26.

At nine o'clock the singing was called to order by T. L. Robinson, by singing the old familiar hymn "Blest be the tie that binds," and J. E. Goss led in prayer. T. L. Robinson was again chosen chairman and J. E. Goss secretary. W. B. Jones, D. S. Robinson, John Calloway and G. W. Davis arranging committee. W. H. Robinson, J. M. Curlee, T. M. Pyron and W. H. Driver were appointed to conduct the morning service, with Misses Anna Robinson, Martha Pyron and Dora Dupree, organists; after which refreshments were served and everyone received a bountiful share.

At 1:30 o'clock the crowd reassembled at the house, and O. Y. Robinson, J. E. Goss and Riley Robinson were placed on the program for the evening, and Misses Martha Pyron and Anna Robinson, organists. At 3:20 o'clock the class led by T. L. Robinson sang "God be with you" and the singing was adjourned to meet again on the fourth Sunday in May, 1902.

The Bible is very explicit in the commission to sing. In a great many instances the people were commanded to praise God in song. Isaiah 12th chapter and 15th verse says sing unto the Lord, for He hath done excellent things; this is known in all the world. Psalms 66:2. Sing forth the honor of His name, make his praise glorious; Psalms 100:2. Serve the Lord with gladness, come before His presence with singing. Surely God's blessing is visited to the people at Salem, for from beginning to end the singing was a great success. It seemed that all were truly singing for joy, and sang with the spirit and understandstanding. Good order was a special feature of the day; never was there a more attentive congregation gathered in one place. There was an extremely large crowd and all seemed to enjoy themselves; they seemed to have the scripture in mind which says: "Sing unto the Lord a new song," and praise Him with the timbrel and harp. May God richly bless and fully sanctify the work that was done and may people have had a right conception of the songs, and that we may ever be ready to sing God's praises and glorify His name. May God be with us till we meet again, is my prayer.

J. E. GOSS, Sec.

OLANTON, - - - ALABAMA.

A school teacher in Nebraska recently saved thirteen of her pupils from drowning. This is one of those little things that the superstition monger never remembers long.

In the international question of shipments of mules from the United States to the British army in the Transvaal nobody has thought it worth while to find out the sympathies of the mule.

Some idea of the magnitude of King Edward's realm may be gained when it is understood that he rules over one continent, 100 peninsulas, 500 promonitories, 1000 lakes, 2000 rivers and 10,000 islands and only one woman.

New York City is still in MacGregor's place among American ports. More than half of all the imports and more than one-third of all the exports of the United States for the fiscal year 1900 came into or went out of New York Harbor.

The Russian Government grants subsidies for the purpose of helping new settlers. This money is spent in encouraging farming and fruit-raising. Subventions are given for the first six years. During the following ten years these subventions must be repaid in yearly payments. Since 1894 $2,605,500 has been spent in that way.

The origin of the word "budget," meaning an estimate of Government revenues and expenses, is thus explained: Almost from time immemorial it was the custom in England to put the estimates of receipts and expenditures presented to Parliament in a leather bag, the word budget being thus borrowed from the old Norman word bougette, which signifies a leather purse. Curiously enough, the word has passed back again into France from England.

Colonel Richard Van Horn says that the name Oklahoma was first applied to the territory in a public document in the bill which he introduced in congress in 1869 for the consolidation of the Indian tribes and the organization of a government for the Indian Territory. The name was suggested by Colonel Elias S. Boudinot, the noted Cherokee, who said, if Colonel Van Horn's memory is not at fault, that it was a Creek word, and meant Red Man's Land, or the country of the red man.

In an article in the Monthly Weather Review, the official publication of the United States weather bureau, it is stated that during the past year 15,000 shooting stations have been established in Italy and a very large number in Southern France and Austria. It is estimated there are about 20,000 stations in all. The statement is also advanced that, despite the large number of shooting stations, there is at present no conclusive evidence that the shooting has any effect whatever upon hail storms or hail. Even the recent congress of hail-shooters at Padua is looked upon only as an indication of extensive experiments. Several years will probably elapse before the true effect of cannonading is ascertained. Speaking generally, the quantity of powder used is so small that the vortex rings, which the shooting is supposed to set up, are not able to ascend farther than 1000 feet.

The strife to make money, which is so marked a feature of the life of this generation, marks both a peril and an opportunity, thinks the Christian Register. Once men were content to make a living, because a living was all they could expect to make. Now they are eager to make money, because for the first time in the history of the world it is possible for all classes to have at least a chance to make money beyond the needs of what is called a livelihood. Now, in making money, one is apt to forget the uses of money; and the peril that besets us is not to be despised. Greed, selfishness, luxury, sloth, gluttony, intemperance, oppression, cruelty, and all manner of sins and vices gather themselves about money-making in its meaner forms. But we must not forget that commerce, commercialism, and money-making mean for a vast multitude of people emancipation from a drudgery which had no relief. Rightly directed, the money-getter becomes a benefactor. He has the means to get and to enjoy the real things in the beauties of nature, in art, and in social life; and he has the means of multiplying opportunities for others.

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

ALABAMA'S MOST IMPORTANT MEETING

A Representative Body of Citizens—Its Members and Its Work—Complete List of Delegates—The Temporary Organization.

In that historic old building, the capitol at Montgomery, which has witnessed so many important occasions, whose halls have rung with the tread and whose walls have heard the voices of so many illustrious men, is now assembled a convention having before it the consideration of solemn and momentous questions and duties. It is perhaps the most important meeting in the history of Alabama, for its work will make or mar the fortunes of a great people. Alabama is to have a new organic law, and this meeting has before it the task of framing a new constitution under which the citizens of the state may live in peace, safety and prosperity. Able thought, wise counsel and clear judgment are necessary to this end, and these qualifications are possessed in high degree by the 155 representative men in convention assembled and in whom the state reposes an implicit faith.

First Day.

The Delegates Assemble and Take the Oath—Fourteen Unseated—Caucus Nominations.

On Monday precisely at noon in the Representatives' hall in the capitol, Chief Justice McClellan called the convention to order. He stated the purpose of the law and that he was ready to complete the temporary organization. Secretary of State McDavid was asked to act as secretary, and the delegates elect were enrolled, after which Judge McClellan administered to the members the following oath: "I do solemnly swear that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and I will honestly and faithfully perform the duties which are now to devolve on me as a delegate of this convention, so help me God." General Geo. P. Harrison moved to adjourn till Tuesday in view of the fact that a democratic caucus was desired to be held. The Chief Justice announced that the caucus would be held in the hall at 4 p. m., and declared the convention adjourned until 11 o'clock Tuesday morning.

The Caucus.

The Democratic caucus was called to order by Hon. Robert J. Lowe, of Jefferson, and Hon. E. R. Morrisette, of Monroe, was made its temporary chairman. Hon. John T. Ashcraft, of Lauderdale, and John F. Proctor, of Jackson, were elected secretaries. A committee of nine, one member from each congressional district, was appointed to pass upon the rights of delegates as members of the caucus.

It was 6 o'clock when the committee reported. The report included 141 of the delegates elected as eligible to seats in the caucus, excluding fourteen.

The report of the committee was the signal for a rather stormy debate, but the report was finally adopted.

Mr. DeGraffenreid, of Hale, offered an order of business which was adopted and the chair called for nominations for president of the Constitutional Convention. Mr. J. Thomas Heflin placed in nomination Hon. John B. Knox, and the rules were suspended and Mr Knox was unanimously declared the nominee.

The names of Frank N. Julian, of Colbert, and R. E. L. Neil, of Dallas were presented for secretary and Julian won the race by a vote of 72 1-2 to 59 1-2.

Three names were presented for assistant secretary, W. F. Herbert, of Montgomery, John F. Gillies, of Clarke and J. A. Kyle, of Jackson. Herbert won on the second ballot.

Robert Hasson, of Etowah, won the nomination for doorkeeper on the second ballot, and T. J. Fain of Dale was made assistant doorkeeper.

The chair appointed Messrs. Oates, O'Neal and Lomax a committee to notify Mr. Knox of his nomination for the presidency.

Second Day.

Caucus Nominees Elected — Speech by President Knox—Convention Settles Down to Business.

Promptly at 11 o'clock on Wednesday Chief Justice McClellan called the constitutional convention to order, and Rev. Dr. Patterson, of the First Presbyterian church, of Montgomery, opened with prayer.

On motion of Judge Coleman, the convention proceeded to elect a president. John B. Knox, of Calhoun, was nominated, and as no other name was presented, he was declared elected.

Messrs. Coleman, Oates and Lomax were appointed a committee to conduct the new president to the chair. Mr. Knox ascended the stand amid enthusiastic cheers from all parts of the hall and the galleries, and was presented by the Chief Justice. Mr. Knox returned thanks for the distinguished honor conferred and discussed at some length the issues to be considered by the convention.

"These are our problems," he said, "and we should be left to deal with them with our own sense of responsibility and recognized relations in the conduct of government.

"The southern man understands the negro and the negro understands us, and the only conflict that has arisen or that is likely to arise has been brought about by unknown and unwarranted interference from the pretended friends of the north.

"We must do what we propose to do, not by force or fraud, but with firmness and fairness to all, so frame the laws that the purity and sanctity of the ballot shall be preserved in every section of the state."

He recognized the gravity of the subject and trusted that it would be solved with wisdom and sound judgment.

Mr. Knox touched upon the matter of the state's bonded indebtedness. Under the present constitution he doubted the right of the state to refund its bonded indebtedness.

The power of municipal and county governments to create debts was discussed by the speaker. The issuing of bonds should be restricted.

He spoke upon the subject of education, expressing friendliness to the public schools but opposition to local taxation for school purposes.

The nominees of the caucus on the previous evening were all elected, and were sworn in by the president.

A resolution was adopted to appoint a committee to consider the matter of stenographic reports.

Resolutions were adopted providing hat the clergy be invited to open the sessions with prayer, and to apportion seats among the members. Dr. Cunningham moved that the selection of seats be made the special order after the reading of the journal on Thursday.

The convention then adjourned until 11 o'clock Thursday morning.

Hon. John B. Knox, of Anniston, president of the constitutional convention, is a native of Talladega county. His father was a physician and his mother was a daughter of Chancellor Alexander Bowie. He is 43 years of age, one of the foremost lawyers of the state and prominent in democratic politics.

Mr. Julian, the secretary, is a young man, popular with legislators by reason of his connection with the House of Representatives as assistant clerk. He is a native of Colbert county and was for several years connected with the North Alabamian, a paper published at Tuscumbia. Mr. Herbert, assistant secretary, is a well known young Montgomerian.

Messrs. Hasson and Fain have served the House of Representatives in the capacities which they will the convention.

Third Day.

A Short Session—Delegates are Allotted Seats—Committees are Appointed—Second Caucus.

Thursday's session was a short one Rev. A. L. Andrews led in prayer The Secretary called the roll and read the journal.

Mr. Weatherly presented a resolution to give preference of seats to ex-Governors Oates and Jones; ex-Supreme Court Judges Walker and Coleman; members of the convention of 1875, and Dabney Palmer. They chose seats well in front. All were seated in a half hour.

The chair announced committees: On Clergy—Howell, Watts and Blackwell; Stenographic Reports—Oates, Pillans, Merrill, Browne, Foster, Hood, Ashcraft, Weatherly; Rules—Knox, Smith of Mobile, Cunningham, Lomax, Harrison, O'Neal, DeGraffenreid, Browne and J. Thomas Heflin.

Mr. O'Neal moved to invite General Joseph Wheeler to a seat on the floor of the convention. Mr. Lowe objected, and moved to include all members and ex-members of Congress. The whole proposition went to the table. Mr. DeGraffenreid moved that the privileges of the floor be accorded General Wheeler. The motion was adopted. Several resolutions were presented: to fix the regular hour of adjournment at 1 p.m.; to print 5,000 copies of President Knox's address; to fix the number of standing committees. The resolutions were referred.

The convention recessed to permit the rules committee to report, and its report provides for ten pages, two messengers, a gallery doorkeeper, and an enrolling and engrossing clerk; the secretary may employ additional assistance with the approval of the president.

Twenty-one committees are provided. Rules, composed of the president and nine members; judiciary, twenty-five members; order, consistency and harmony of the whole constitution, twenty-five; suffrage and elections, twenty-five; legislative department, nineteen; local legislation, nineteen; education, nineteen; taxation, nineteen; executive department, fifteen; preamble and declaration of rights, fifteen; corporations, fifteen; judicial department, fifteen; exemptions, fifteen; militia, fifteen; banks and banking, fifteen; municipal corporations, fifteen; state and county boundaries, fifteen; impeachments, fifteen; amending the constitution and miscellaneous, fifteen; on the journal, five; schedules, printing and incidental expenses, nine.

A majority of each committee is to constitute a quorum; committeees will be appointed by the president.

The committees on rules, judiciary, order and consistency, suffrage and elections and corporations will be entitled to a clerk.

The president announced the following appointments:

To be enrolling and engrossing clerk—Mrs. Louis B. Francis, of Birmingham; to be doorkeeper of the gallery W. H. Manghans, of Calhoun, also the pages and messengers. Adjourned.

Another democratic caucus was held at 4 p. m. to reconsider the Elmore county question. The session lasted until 8 o'clock and adjourned until Friday without reaching a decision.

Fourth Day.

A Short Session—Constitution Will be Submitted to the People—A Stenographer Employed.

The convention was called to order at 11 a. m. by the president. 139 delegates were present. Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Andrews.

The feature of the day's session was the resolution of Mr. Reese to submit the constitution framed by the convention to the people. There was no opposition to the resolution.

Mr. Pettus presented a resolution to abide by the act of the General Assembly in framing the constitution. It went to the committee on rules.

Senators Pettus and Morgan were extended the privileges of the floor and invited to attend the convention's deliberations.

Governor Oates presented the report of the committee on stenographic reports, favoring reporting the proceedings and recommending the plan of Mr Pat McGauly at $70 a day, to furnish 1,000 copies a day for the use of the members. There was considerable dissension about the matter but the report was adopted.

An adjournment was taken until Monday noon, to give the president time to select committees.

ATHENS HAS THE FEVER.

A company composed of local capitalists and men from Indiana has been formed at Athens to bore for natural gas and oil and will begin as soon as leases are obtained on certain properties. The city has granted a franchise to the company for the laying of pipe lines and soon the company will begin active operations.

Senator Lodge will probably be chairman of the senate committee on Foreign Relations. This means much for the Isthmian canal and the extension of the reciprocity principle.

The board having charge of the location of the naval station on Pearl harbor, Hawaii, has completed its work. The board finds that Pearl is the only harbor in the Hawaiian group capable of complete naval defense. It is five miles from Honolulu.

That the state of affairs in Russia is in some new way or unprecedented degree alarming to the government of that country is made more than evident by the fact that the banishment of Tolstoi has at last been ordered. The rather contemptuous leniency by which the novelist has profited so long was based on a belief that his preaching and example could have no practical effect and that therefore it was not worth while to punish in any way a man of great literary repute, with many admirers in other lands. Had he been less famous, of course he would have been sent to Siberia years ago. Even now the government, despotic as it is, has not dared to do that, and by withholding the punishment that would have been inflicted upon another foe of the same sort, it has increased, rather than decreased such dangers as Tolstoi's doctrines created. Wherever he goes, he will be able to talk and write, and this subject now will naturally be the evils of which he has at last been the victim. Hitherto he could not reasonably denounce to the utmost official methods which did not prevent him from doing about as he pleased, but in involuntary exile appreciation of the wrongs and sufferings of his people ceases to be theoretical. So the banishment, whatever its excuse, was a most serious mistake, and it hints at the existence of something much like a panic among the advisers of the czar.

President Diaz of Mexico may be appealed to if President McKinley and Secretary Hay are unable to bring the disputants over the second Pan-American Congress together. President Diaz is as eager as President McKinley to bring about a harmonious understanding between the nations of the new world, and views with suspicion the part that Europe is playing in the game. It is understood that Peru and Bolivia have received assurance from Europe of financial aid in recovering their lost provinces, and a way to the sea if these nations succeed in so manipulating the forthcoming Pan-American Congress as to force arbitration on Chili.

A procession of whales three miles long is reported from Alaska. This helps sustain the impression that Alaska is one of the most imaginative countries on the map.

Farrow Man Wrought Up Over Stories of Old Antebellum Days

[illegible] ARE NOT ALL DEAD YET

Threatens Fake Regarding "Providence Spring" is Being Vigorously Refuted. Says William [illegible]

As the poet, Browning, said [illegible] brought the [illegible] he was dead and [illegible] Andersonville [illegible] again. We thought [illegible] our general, Senator Hill, had [illegible] that whole Andersonville business [illegible] quietly reply to Blaine [illegible] forty-five years ago. He proved [illegible] by the federal records that the suffering [illegible] their other born in that prison [illegible] the crime, the shame of Sta[illegible] refused to exchange with [illegible] and refused to send medicine and [illegible] for their sick. We did the very [illegible] could and some honest northern [illegible] have so written and published [illegible] in northern papers. But every [illegible] the same old lie breaks loose [illegible] and now they have started [illegible] about a spring—the "Providence spring" which they say gushes [illegible] the ground just in time to save [illegible] soldiers from perishing for lack [illegible] water. And they are spending money [illegible] in improving and beautifying the [illegible] around the spring. The [illegible] hars. Scores of good [illegible] still live who knew of that spring [illegible] back in the 40's, when Andersonville [illegible] a wilderness and the spring [illegible] known as a deer stand. Yes [illegible] a Providence spring, for providence created it, and all the other [illegible] when He made the continents [illegible] the rivers and mountains. Andersonville never lacked water and was [illegible] for a prison because of the [illegible] of water, and that little [illegible] of no consequence, for [illegible] about thirty gallons an hour [illegible] would have been less than half [illegible] a day to the prisoners. The [illegible] was covered up by the hand [illegible] striking for the stockade and [illegible] and some other channel and [illegible] out again after a big rain [illegible] that's all there is about it. No [illegible] Providence spring! Those everlasting [illegible] are just hunting up some [illegible] sentiment. This spring business [illegible] Barbara Frietchie delusion [illegible] up to keep the northern heart [illegible] and fire up Goldwin Smith [illegible] some more historic lies about [illegible] South. But "whom the Lord loveth [illegible] chasteneth," and our faith [illegible] that He loves our people very much [illegible] He would not chasten us so much [illegible] with these vile slanders [illegible] "And I said in mine haste all men are [illegible]," said David. If he had lived [illegible] our day he might have said [illegible] at his leisure. We are getting [illegible] and so hardened to their [illegible] and prevarication that [illegible] believe them when they tell [illegible] truth. History says that Israel [illegible] crawled into a cave and killed [illegible] I used to believe that, but [illegible] now since Goldwin Smith has [illegible] Benedict Arnold as a hero [illegible] Providence spring! What a lie!

But our veterans are clearing up this history business and our teachers [illegible] better be very careful what they [illegible] I never did understand until [illegible] why Maury's geography was [illegible] out of so many schools and [illegible] was put in. There is some brimstone in this school book business [illegible] Maury is paid to school commissioners [illegible] members, or some outside lawyers [illegible] their influence.

Last year a teacher high in office at [illegible] was expelled for accepting [illegible] and I have heard it charged that [illegible] lawyer in Atlanta got big money for [illegible] a book into the public [illegible] Money rules the roost in [illegible] and there is a money [illegible] behind this Andersonville business, [illegible] Providence spring! Oh, my country! [illegible] does providence have to do with [illegible] fellows except to let them run [illegible] course. "I have seen the wicked [illegible] like a green bay tree," says [illegible] An old darky heard me say, [illegible] what makes the Lord smile [illegible] Jim Wilkins so. Jim is as mean [illegible] a dog, but every trade he makes [illegible] everything he touches turns into [illegible] He is getting richer and [illegible] every year."

The old darky said: "Why, honey [illegible] Lord hain't got anything to do [illegible] Jim Wilkins. Lord hain't nothin' [illegible] Lord dun give him up long time [illegible] That's why he gittin' rich—old [illegible] runnin' him."

Providence spring! But it is mighty [illegible] to me that the northern people will let Goldwin Smith scandalize [illegible] founders of our government. [illegible] that everybody north and [illegible] idolized Washington and Jefferson [illegible] and Madison and Monroe. [illegible] that everybody outside of [illegible] chusetts was proud of Patrick [illegible] and Randolph and Henry Clay [illegible] know that Benedict Arnold [illegible] admirer or an apologizer north [illegible] or in England or anywhere. [illegible] know that Goldwin Smith was [illegible] conspicuous historian until this [illegible] story appeared. It appears that [illegible] great favorite in England and [illegible] and is a contributor to the [illegible] magazines and co-editor of [illegible] encyclopedia.

[illegible] we are making progress. Providence spring! Those yankees say [illegible] in the nick of time, when [illegible] was nearly gone and despair had [illegible] for want of water, Providence [illegible] the ground and the water

BILL ARP'S LETTER

Man Wrought Up Over ies of Old Andersonville.

"THEY ARE NOT ALL DEAD YET."

A Tradition Fake Regarding "Prov nce Spring" Is Being Vig erously Refashed, Says
William

"A man came to me in Rome and said: "I thought the war was dead and damned."
but it seems that Andersonville has risen again. We thought that some senator from Maine had killed it when he made his business in speech referring to Blaine some years ago. He proved from the records that the sufferings of the men in that prison was not the fault nor the shame of Stan ton, who refused to exchange with us even medicine and sup plies for their sick. We did the very best we could and some honest north ern soldiers have so written and pub lished in northern papers. But ever and anon in the same old way he breaks loose again and they have started a new one about a spring. The "Provi dence spring" which they say gushed forth like it did when Moses struck the rock with his rod. Mr. Pillsbury, of Americus, an honorable veteran, was there on guard and says the whole thing is made up, and it can be proved so by many old citizens of Sumter county. We will have to nail that Andersonville lie to a board and put it up at the forks of the road. We will brand it when we meet at Memphis. I want to meet Colonel John Cussons there and thank him for his little book. I want every veteran to have one. The price is only 25 cents and it is worth ten times that much to have it in the house and refer to it sometimes when we get cussin' mad.

Providence spring! I'm going to see if I can't beat my neighbors, Cary and Yarbrough and Corley and Mrs. Fields, raising tomatoes. Mr. Corley has put out only six plants and says they will yield him twenty bushels of fruit. Mr. Yarbrough, the preacher, has six plants. He dug six wells about two feet deep and filled them up with all sorts of fertile and says he will have a wagon load. Last year he had eight on one stem—all touching each other, and the eight weighed twelve pounds! I've seen the photograph. I've got out 100 plants and am not done yet, and they laugh at me, but I want a load or two to give away. My garden must keep me busy. It don't do to sit down and brood over trouble and slander and lies. I pick strawberries every day, but I'm not fond of the business. Have to stoop too much and it gives me the backache. I'm the only boy left and my folks keep me very busy.—Bill Arp, in Atlanta Constitution.

SUCCESS IN SELF-POSSESSION.

So Says Walter Damrosch, and He Surely Ought to Know.

The man who makes public appearances must have self-possession, says Walter Damrosch. I have learned by great experience that this quality is all important. There have been times when the slightest perturbation on my part would have made my orchestra play out of time and out of tune. The musicians in an orchestra place just as much faith in their conductor as do soldiers in their general.

The best example of this quality I ever witnessed was aboard an Atlantic liner.

The second day we ran into violent weather. The propeller shaft broke, and we were drifting helplessly. The waves ran high and a general scare ensued. Hysterical women ran hither and thither and the men were pale and nervous. The officers, not knowing what had happened, at first, were obviously frightened. A pandemonium seemed imminent.

In the midst of it all a young man whom I remember by the name of Stone, who was making his first voyage, came out of his stateroom in an immaculate yachting suit; he was cool and collected.

A man who had been racing up and down, clad in one or two scanty garments, seized him by the shoulders, jammed him against the rail, and frantically said:

"For heaven's sake what is the matter? What is the matter?"

"Go and ask the captain, please," replied Stone.

"Have you any idea what is going on?"

Stone pulled out his watch, looked at it and said, as he puffed a cigar:

"I suppose it is something that happens every Tuesday morning. This is my first trip over, and I'm not running the ship this time."

In five minutes order was restored, because other excited passengers became calm at the self-possession of the young man.—Success.

What Russia Will Have.

The Russian Empire, as we all know, originated in the fusion of several nomadic tribes, which led to the formation of the Principality of Moscow soon after the incursion of the Golden Horde. In 1462 Ivan III. took the title of Czar of Moscovy, and laid the foundations of Russian power. The early Czars of Moscovy ruled over a kingdom of about half a million of square miles. The Russian Empire of today compasses some 9,000,000 square miles. It extends from the Baltic Sea to the Pacific, and from the Arctic Ocean to Afghanistan and Persia. It possesses every variety of climate and territory of every description. But no great nation is so badly situated as Russia in regard to access to the sea. She has four seaboards—the Arctic Ocean, the Pacific, the Baltic, and the Black Sea. The first is practically useless. The outlet to the Pacific is inadequate. It is often closed by ice, and is moreover at an immense distance from the centres of commerce. The Baltic is closed every winter, and access from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean and the ocean may be made impossible in case of war. This want of access to the sea is a leading factor in Russian politics. It makes the internal progress of the nation difficult, and is one of the causes why new territories are added constantly to the empire. These annexations are often made in pursuance of a design to get to the open ocean, and thus place the empire on a parity with other great powers.—The National Review.

Wonderful Electric Wire.

Bavaria has the most curious of all claims to notoriety, which is, that it possesses the longest lightning conductor in the world. It rises some yards above the meteorological station on the Zugspitze, the highest point in the German empire, and runs down the side of the mountain to the bottom of the Hollenthal, where there is running water all the year round. The length of the rod is five and one-half kilometers—nearly three miles and a half.

NATIVE AFRICAN PRINTERS.

Dwellers on Lake Tanganyika Who Have Just Issued Their First Book.

The Catholic fathers have a flourishing mission station on the west shore of Lake Tanganyika, at a place where the forest comes nearly down to the water's edge. This place has been known for fifteen years on the maps as Mpala, and much has been written about it as a station where the Catholic missionaries have been trying to introduce civilization in a most practical manner.

Here in the depths of Central Africa they have been teaching the natives how to make brick and lumber, how to improve the quality of the iron they dig from the hills, how to make better implements from this useful metal and the best methods of tilling their crops. A great many natives have come from far around to enter the schools at Mpala.

A year ago this month the natives who had been taught to set type in the printing office made their first book. A few copies of it have reached Europe and attracted considerable attention. The little book is a geography. It tells, in the native language and in the simplest manner, something about the world. It gives the most interesting facts about the geography and peoples of some of the great nations. There are only fifty-six pages in it, but they contain a great deal of information without being crowded with so much detail as to make the story hard to read.

Father G. Van Acker wrote the little volume, superintended the typesetting and printing, and made the map which adorns the work. The natives under his tuition attended to every mechanical detail, from typesetting to binding. The book is an excellent specimen of typography considering that it is the first effort of the black printers who made it, and it furnishes conclusive evidence that progress is making in the heart of Central Africa.—New York Sun.

New York's Great Playgrounds.

The greater part of the forests of the Adirondack Mountains is now the property of the people of New York. In these alone there are ten times the area of the New Forest—946,888 acres being in what is called the Adirondack Park. There are besides 56,000 acres in the Catskills. Inlying sections are compulsorily bought up, and the whole made into one vast contiguous tract guarded by firemen, game-watchers and fish-keepers. The whole of this is being rapidly restored to the primitive state in which Deerslayer and the Delaware hunted and shot. The trees are State property, and will be partly subjected to regular forestry to preserve the head-waters of rivers and to pay expenses, and partly let grow wild and untended. The State covers all that region where the great fights took place both between us and the French and later between the Colonists and the English armies, along the line of lakes and rivers reaching from Ontario to the Hudson, while it runs back to the St. Lawrence, along the whole south shore of Ontario and along part of Lake Erie. Champlain, where the British and American flotillas fought and sunk each other, is now a great fish preserve stocked by the State Fish Commission. Ontario is to be the greatest trout fishery in the world and the St. Lawrence a combined pleasure river for two nations.—London Spectator.

Puzzling Height of a Tower.

A great mystery invests the electric tower at the Pan-American Exposition. Nobody knows how high it is. At any rate, that is a fair inference from published descriptions. A long account of it in the Industrial and Architectural Review says: "From the water to the feet of the figure of 'Electricity' is a vertical distance of 331 feet. The figure is seventeen feet in height."

To verify this we turn to certain Pan-American publications at hand. One official looking book in a gray-blue cover informs us that "the electric tower is 391 feet high." On the same page with this statement is a cut of the tower labeled "Electric Tower, 375 feet high." Another exposition folder—a green and yellow one—gives the height of the tower as 409 feet, and of the goddess as eighteen feet, but whether or not she is included in the 409 feet, is not stated. The builder of the statue informs the Express that her height is twenty-four feet.

Still another exposition booklet with an esthetic sage-green cover says of this marvelous construction that it is "a stately tower of soaring height." Just how high a thing has to be before it is of "soaring height" we do not know, but we think in this case the statement is correct.—Buffalo Express.

The Germ Theory.

The origin of disease was formerly a subject of mystery. It is now pretty thoroughly established that almost every form of disease is caused by the introduction into the human system of certain poisonous minute organisms. Thus one kind of germ breeds small pox, another scarlet fever, and so on.

As it is the function of the leucocytes to destroy these and all other germs, the perfectly healthy body is really immune. It is only when the system becomes weakened that the leucocytes are unable to do their work and the unchecked germs get a hold on the organism, multiply and proceed to destroy it as fast as they can.

A widespread understanding of these incalculably important doctrines would do much to raise the general standard of health.—New York World.

Invention of the Pneumatic Tire.

It is of considerable interest that the pneumatic tire, to which the bicycle owes a large share of its popularity, was invented by an American, R. W. Thompson, in 1847.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

DISCOURSE BY THE EMINENT DIVINE LAST SUNDAY.

Subject: The Benefits of Rational Amusements—Evils of Straitjacket Religion—Depraving Influences—Warm Hearted People Most Tempted.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—This discourse of Dr. Talmage is in accord with all innocent hilarities, while it represents amusements that belittle and deprave; text, II Samuel ii. 14, "Let the young men now arise and play before us."

There are two armies encamped by the pool of Gibeon. The time hangs heavily on their hands. One army proposes a game of sword fencing. Nothing could be more healthful and innocent. The other army accepts the challenge. Twelve men against twelve men, the sport opens. But something went adversely. Perhaps one of the swordsmen got an unlucky slip or in some way had his ire aroused, and that which opened in sportfulness ended in violence, each one taking his contestant by the hair and then with the sword thrusting him in the side, so that that which opened in innocent fun ended in the massacre of all the twenty-four sportsmen. Was there ever a better illustration of what was true then and is true now—that that which is innocent may be made destructive?

What of a worldly nature is more important and strengthening and innocent than amusement, and yet what has counted more victims? I have no sympathy with a straitjacket religion. This is a very bright world to me, and I propose to do all I can to make it bright for others. I never could keep step to a dead march. A book years ago issued says that a Christian man has a right to some amusements. For instance, if he comes at night weary from his work and, feeling the need of recreation, puts on his slippers and goes into his garret and walks lively round the floor several times there can be no harm in it. I believe the church of God has made a great mistake in trying to suppress the sportfulness of youth and drive out from men their love of amusement. If God ever implanted anything in us, He implanted this desire. But instead of providing for this demand of our nature the church of God has for the main part ignored it. As in a riot the major plants a battery at the end of the street and has it fired off so that everything is cut down that happens to stand in the range, the good as well as the bad, so there are men in the church who plant their batteries of condemnation and fire away indiscriminately. Everything is condemned. But Paul, the apostle, commends those who use the world without abusing it, and in the natural world God has done everything to please and amuse us.

And I am glad to know that in all our cities there are plenty of places where we may find elevated moral entertainment. But all honest men and good women will agree with me in the statement that one of the worst things in these cities is corrupt amusement. Multitudes have gone down under the blasting influence, never to rise. If we may judge of what is going on in many of the places of amusement by the pictures on board fences and in many of the show windows, there is not a much lower depth of profligacy to reach. At Naples, Italy, they keep such pictures locked up from indiscriminate inspection. Those pictures were exhumed from Pompeii, and are not fit for public gaze. If the effrontery of bad places of amusement in hanging out improper advertisements of what they are doing night by night grows worse in the same proportion, in fifty years some of our modern cities will beat Pompeii.

I project certain principles by which you may judge in regard to any amusement or recreation, finding out for yourself whether it is right or wrong.

I remark, in the first place, that you can judge of the moral character of any amusement by its healthful result or by its baleful reaction. There are people who seem made up of hard facts. They are a combination of multiplication tables and statistics. If you show them an exquisite picture they will begin to discuss the pigments involved in the coloring. If you show them a beautiful rose they will submit it to a botanical analysis, which is only the post-mortem examination of a flower. They have no rebound in their nature. They never do anything more than smile. There are no great tides of feeling surging up from the depths of their soul in billow after billow of reverberating laughter. They seem as if nature had built them by contract and made a bungling job of it. But blessed be God, there are people in the world who have bright faces and whose life is a song, an anthem, a paean of victory.

Now, it is these exhilarant and sympathetic and warm hearted people that are most tempted to pernicious amusements. In proportion as a ship is swift it wants a strong helmsman, in proportion as a horse is gay it wants a stout driver, and these people of exuberant nature will do well to look at the reaction of all their amusements. If an amusement sends you home at night nervous, so that you cannot sleep, and you rise up in the morning not because you are slept out, but because your duty drags you from your slumbers, you have been where you ought not to have been. There are amusements that send a man next day to his work with his eyes bloodshot, yawning, stupid, nauseated, and they are wrong kinds of amusement. They are entertainments that give a man disgust with the drudgery of life, with tools because they are not swords, with working aprons because they are not robes, with cattle because they are not infuriated bulls of the arena.

If any amusement sends you home longing for a life of romance and thrilling adventure, love that takes poison and shoots itself, moonlight adventures and hairbreadth escapes, you may depend upon it that you are the sacrificed victim of unsanctified pleasure. Our recreations are intended to build us up, and if they pull us down as to our moral or as to our physical strength you may come to the conclusion that they are obnoxious.

There is nothing more depraving than attendance upon amusements that are full of innuendo and low suggestion. The young man enters. At first he sits far back, with his hat on and his coat collar up, fearful that somebody there may know him. Several nights pass on. He takes off his hat earlier and puts his coat collar down. The blush that first came into his cheek when anything indecent was enacted comes no more to his cheek. Farewell, young man! You have probably started on the long road which ends in consummate destruction. The stars of hope will go out one by one until you will be left in utter darkness. Hear you not the rush of the maelstrom, in whose outer circle your boat now dances, making merry with the whirling waters? But you are being drawn in, and the gentle motion will become terrific agitation. You cry for help in vain; you pull at the oar to put back, but the struggle will not avail. You will be tossed and dashed and shipwrecked and swallowed in the whirlpool that has already crushed in its wrath 10,000 hulks.

Young men who have come from the country residence to city residence will do well to be on guard and let no one induce them to places of improper amusement. It is mightily alluring when a young man, long a citizen, offers to show a newcomer all around.

Still further, those amusements are wrong which lead you into expenditure beyond your means. Money spent in recreation is not thrown away. It is all folly for us to come from a place of amusement feeling that we have wasted our money and time. You may by it have made an investment worth more than the transaction that yielded you hundreds or thousands of dollars. But how many properties have been riddled by costly amusements.

How brightly the path of unrestrained amusement opens! The young man says: "Now I am off for a good time. Never mind economy. I'll get money somehow. What a fine road! What a beautiful day for a ride! Crack the whip and over the turnpike! Come, boys, fill high your glasses! Drink! Long life, health, plenty of rides just like this!" Hard working men hear the clatter of the hoofs and look up and say: "Why, I wonder where those fellows get their money from? We have to toil and drudge. They do nothing. To these gay men life is a theme and an excitement. They stare at other people and in turn are stared at. The watch chain jingles, the cup foams, midnight hears their guffaw, they swagger, they jostle decent men off the sidewalk, they take the name of God in vain, they parody the hymn they learned at their mother's knee, and to all pictures of coming disaster they cry out, "Who cares?" and to the counsel of some Christian friend, "Who are you?"

I go further and say that all those amusements are wrong which lead into bad company. If you go to any place where you have to associate with the intemperate, with the unclean, with the abandoned, however well they may be dressed, in the name of God quit it. They will despoil your nature.

I had a friend in the West—a rare friend. He was one of the first to welcome me to my new home. To fine personal appearance he added a generosity, frankness and ardor of nature that made me love him like a brother. But I saw evil people gathering around him. They came up from the saloons, from the gambling hells. They plied him with a thousand arts. They seized upon his social nature, and he could not stand the charm. They drove him on the rocks, like a ship, full winged, shivering on the breakers. I used to admonish him. I would say, "Now, I wish you would quit those bad habits and become a Christian." "Oh," he would reply, "I would like to, I would like to, but I have gone so far I don't think there is any way back." In his moments of repentance he would go home and take his little girl of eight years and embrace her convulsively, and cover her with adornments, and strew around her pictures and toys and everything that could make her happy, and then, as though hounded by an evil spirit, he would go out to the infaming cup and the house of shame like a fool to the correction of the stocks.

I was summoned to his deathbed; I hastened; I entered the room, I found him, to my surprise, lying in full everyday dress on the top of the couch. I put out my hand. He grasped it excitedly and said: "Sit down, Mr. Talmage, right there." I sat down. He said: "Last night I saw my mother, who has been dead twenty years, and she sat just where you sit now. It was no dream, I was wide awake. There was no delusion in the matter. I saw her just as plainly as I see you. Wife, I wish you would take these strings off me. There are strings spun all around my body. I wish you would take them off me." I saw it was delirium. "Oh," replied his wife, "my dear, there is nothing there; there is nothing there!" He went on and said: "Just where you sit, Mr. Talmage, my mother sat. She said to me, 'Henry, I do wish you would do better.' I got out of bed, put my arms around her and said: 'Mother, I want to do better. I have been trying to do better. Won't you help me to do better? You used to help me?' No mistake about it; no delusion. I saw here—the cap and the apron and the spectacles—just as she used to look twenty years ago. But I do wish you would take these strings away. They annoy me so I can hardly talk. Won't you take them away?" I knelt down and prayed, conscious of the fact that he did not realize what I was saying. I got up. I said: "Goodby! I hope you will be better soon." He said, "Goodby, goodby!"

That night his soul went up to the God who gave it. Arrangements were made for the obsequies. Some said: "Don't bring him in the church. He was too dissolute." "Oh," I said, "bring him. He was a good friend of mine while he was alive, and I shall stand by him now that he is dead. Bring him to the church."

As I sat in the pulpit and saw his body coming up through the aisle I felt as if I could weep tears of blood. I told the people that day: "This man had his virtues and a good many of them. He had his faults and a good many of them. But if there is any man in this audience who is without sin let him cast the first stone at this coffin lid." One one side of the pulpit sat that little child, rosy, sweet faced, as beautiful as any little child that sat at your table this morning, I warrant you. She looked up wistfully, not knowing the full sorrows of an orphan child.

This destroyed man was a Samson in physical strength, but Delilah sheared him, and the Philistines of evil companionship dug his eyes out and threw him into the prison of evil habits. But in the hour of his death he rose up and took hold of the two pillared curses of God against drunkenness and uncleanness and threw himself forward until down upon him and his companions there came the thunders of an eternal catastrophe.

Again, any amusement that gives you a distaste for domestic life is bad. How many bright domestic circles have been broken up by sinful amusements! The father went off, the mother went off, the child went off. There are to-day fragments before me of blasted households. Oh, if you have wandered away, I would like to charm you back to the sound of that one word "home."

I saw a wayward husband standing at the deathbed of his Christian wife, and I saw her point to a ring on her finger and heard her say to her husband: "Do you see that ring?" He replied: "Yes, I see it." "Well," said she, "do you remember who put it there?" "Yes," said he, "I put it there." And all the past seemed to rush upon him. By the memory of that day when, in the presence of men and angels, you promised to be faithful in joy and sorrow and in sickness and in health; by the memory of those pleasant hours when you sat together in your new home talking of a bright future; by the cradle and the joyful hour when one life was spared and another given; by that sickbed, when the little one lifted up the hands and called for help, and you knew he must die, and he put one arm around each of your necks and brought you very near together in that dying kiss; by the little grave in the cemetery that you never think of without a rush of tears; by the family Bible, where, amid stories of heavenly love, is the brief but expressive record of births and deaths; by the neglects of the past and by the agonies of the future; by a judgment day, when husbands and wives, parents and children, in immortal groups, will stand to be caught up in shining array or to shrink down into darkness—by all that I beg you give to home your best affections.

Ah, my friends, there is an hour coming when our past life will probably pass before us in review. It will be our last hour. If from our death pillow we have to look back and see a life spent in sinful amusement, there will be a dart that will strike through our soul sharper than the dagger with which Virginius slew his child. The memory of the past will make us quake like Macbeth; the iniquities and rioting through which we have passed will come upon us weird and skeleton as Meg Merrilies. Death, the old Shylock, will demand and take the remaining pound of flesh and the remaining drop of blood, and upon our last opportunity for repentance and our last chance for heaven the curtain will forever drop.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JUNE 2.

Subject: Jesus Our High Priest in Heaven. Heb. iv. 11-14, 24-30 — Golden Text, Heb. vii. 25 — Memory Verses, 24 25— Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

11. "But Christ having come" (R. V.) Although Christ be but one, yet He is understood by us under a variety of forms. He is the "tabernacle" on account of the human body in which He dwelt. He is the "table" because He is our bread of life. He is the "ark" which has the law of God inclosed within, because He is the Word of the Father. He is the "candlestick" because He is our spiritual light. He is the "altar of incense" because He is the sweet smelling odor in sanctification. He is the "altar of burnt offering," because He is the victim by death on the cross for the sins of the whole world. The apostle does not in any way refer slightingly of the Jewish institution, for they were ordained of God, but he endeavors to show those to whom he was writing that inasmuch as the great Antitype had appeared the types would of necessity be done away. "An high priest." The work of the high priest was threefold: 1. To offer sacrifices. 2. To act as mediator. 3. To instruct the people. The first great work Christ had to do was to offer an acceptable sacrifice, and this He did by offering Himself. As the God man He is able to act as mediator, because through His divine nature He can approach the court of heaven, and in His human nature He is "touched with the feeling of other infirmities," and having been tempted in all points like as we are. He is able to succor them that are tempted." Heb. 2: 18; 4: 15. As an instructor He stands forth as the greatest Teacher the world has ever seen. "Of good things to come." Christ our high priest is a dispenser of all the spiritual blessings promised in this world or the next. "More perfect tabernacle." Authorities seem about divided as to the meaning of these words. Some think they have reference to Christ Himself, and that His body is the tabernacle; others think the tabernacle not made with hands refers to heaven, representing the spiritual sphere. "Not of this creation" (R. V.) "Not making any part of this lower creation."

12. "By His own blood." Here the redemption of man is attributed to the blood of Christ, and this blood is stated to be shed in a sacrificial way, precisely as the blood of bulls, goats and calves was shed under the law. "Once for all" (R. V.) The high priest entered into the holiest once each year, but Christ made an atonement that did not need to be repeated. "Into the holy place." Or sanctuary, signifying heaven. There were two apartments to the tabernacle proper; the first, which was situated toward the east, was called the sanctuary or holy place; it was thirty feet long and fifty feet wide and contained the altar of incense, the table of shewbread and the candlestick. The second apartment was called the Holy of Holies; it was ten cubits (fifteen feet) each way, being a cube; its only article of furniture was the ark of the covenant. Into the holiest place the high priest entered once each year, on the great day of atonement, which was the 10th of Tishri (October), carrying with him the golden censer and "not without blood." "Eternal redemption." An endless redemption from sin; it is eternal in its merit and efficacy.

13. "Blood—ashes." See Lev. 16: 14, 15; Num. 19: 2-10. "Sprinkling." Blood was sprinkled everywhere. The priest sprinkled the tabernacle, and all the utensils, the altars, the people, the veil, the mercy seat, in fact, everywhere we see the blood. The ashes of the heifer were put in pure water and sprinkled on those who had contracted any legal defilement. Num. 19: 17-21. "The unclean." These were distinctly for purification from ceremonial offences. "The flesh." Purifying from uncleanness according to the Mosaic ritual, having the body particularly in view.

14. "How much more." This form of argument is characteristic of this epistle. That which the blood of bulls could never do the blood of Jesus has forever done. "Through the eternal Spirit." There are two views with regard to the meaning of this: 1. By His own divine nature. 2. By the help and through the power of the Holy Spirit. The latter appears to be the correct explanation. "Without blemish" (R. V.) This is an allusion to the Jewish offerings which, to be acceptable to God, must be without blemish. "Dead works." All sinful works.

24. "Made with hands." He has not entered into the holy places in the tabernacle or temple as the Jewish high priest did, but into heaven itself, which He has thus opened to all believers. "Like in pattern to the true" (R. V.) The sanctuary of God on earth is a pattern of heaven, and communion with God in His sanctuary is to His people a heaven on earth. "To appear." As our Intercessor; "for us." He sits in heaven as High Priest to present to the Father His own atonement and sacrifice for the sins of the whole world.

25. "Offer Himself often." In this and the next verse the apostle shows that the atonement of Christ once made was sufficient for all nations and all ages. See ch. v. 12. "Of others." That is, with the blood of bullocks and goats.

26. "Since the foundation," etc. Although Christ offered Himself only once, that one offering is in itself so meritorious that its influence reacheth backward to the beginning of the world and forward to the end of time; on which account Christ is termed (Rev. 13: 8) "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." "End of the ages" (R. V.) This has reference to the end of the Jewish dispensation. "To put away sin." To abolish sin-offerings. But in doing away with the sin-offerings He made an offering for sin, and is now able to deliver from the guilt and power of sin.

27. "As it is appointed," etc. Inasmuch as God hath decreed that man shall die once, and only once, and after this shall come to the judgment, and be judged once; so Christ, who has been offered once, shall die no more.

28. "To bear the sins." There is an allusion here to the scape goat (Lev. 16: 5-10; 20-22) which, in a figure, carried away the sins of the people into the wilderness, but Christ literally bears away the sins of all who come to Him. "That look for Him." All true believers are patiently waiting and earnestly looking for the appearing of Christ. Titus 2: 13; 2 Pet. 3: 11-13. "Shall He appear?" See Acts 1: 11; 1 Thess. 1: 10; 4: 16; 2 Thess. 1: 10. "Apart from sin" (R. V.) When He appears the second time He will come, not as a sacrifice for sin, but in might and power. "Unto salvation." The object of His coming will be to bestow complete happiness upon us. He will deliver the bodies of the saints from the grave, and take all true believers with Him to eternal glory. "Even so, come Lord Jesus!"

THE Confederate reunion at Memphis has been a complete success, and adjourned yesterday evening to meet next year at Dallas, Texas. General John B. Gordon was re-elected commander amid a scene of great enthusiasm. Over twenty thousand visitors attended the reunion. Battle Abbey is to be built.

It is understood that Miss Fannie Griffin will ask the convention for a hearing on the rights of women. Miss Griffin desires to argue the advisability of admitting women to the suffrage. She is the leading woman suffragist in Alabama, and one of the most accomplished orators of either sex. She lives at Verbena.—Montgomery Journal.

Two United States senators have tendered their resignations. They are Ben R. Tillman and John L. McLaurin of South Carolina. The latter has two years yet to serve, and Tillman was only elected last summer for the long term. They will both be candidates, and probably some others will come forward, before a Democratic primary to be held in November.

On Friday, May 24th, the Constitutional Convention, now in session at Montgomery, passed a resolution authorising a stenographic report of the entire proceedings.

The Montgomery Advertiser, always with an eye to business, immediately arranged to publish this report daily, which will give every word uttered, every action taken and every detail enacted during this extraordinary session.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

On Thursday the principal business of the convention was the selection of seats by members. The committee on rules reported, suggesting that twenty-one standing committees should be appointed.

On Friday the convention passed a resolution that the new constitution should be submitted to the people for ratification or rejection. It was also decided to have an official stenographic report of the proceedings at a cost of $70 per day. The convention adjourned until Monday.

On Monday the rules for the permanent organization of the convention were adopted, and the standing committees announced. L. H. Reynolds is on the committee on local legislation, and the committee on banks and banking. Mr. Brooks of Mobile introduced the first ordinance which was that no new debt shall be incurred by the State except for repelling invasion or suppressing insurrection. It provides that the governor may borrow not exceeding $300,000 to meet deficiencies in the treasury (the present limit is $100,000). He introduced another resolution that all male citizens between 18 and 45 be liable to military duty in the militia of the State. A third resolution he introduced was one providing that no public officer should accept a free pass, etc., the penalty for so doing being forfeiture of the office held. It also makes it a misdemeanor for anyone to offer such privileges to office-holders.

Mr. Browne presented an ordinance providing a system of public schools for the State, with school terms of equal length for white and colored from 7 to 21 years of age.

Mr. John Burns of Dallas introduced a resolution that the present limit of taxation should not be increased. General Harrison offered a resolution prohibiting vagrants from voting at any election in this State. Mr. Henderson that the General Assembly should have no power to remove the capitol from Montgomery, and that representation in the General Assembly be on population of all the people. All resolutions were referred to the several committees.

On Tuesday five different ordinances looking to the regulation of the suffrage were introduced and referred to the committee on suffrage and elections.

Mr. Howell presented an ordinance providing for the reduction of the area of counties to 400 square miles, but no new county shall be formed unless it has population enough to entitle it to representation in the General Assembly.

Mr. Kirk of Colbert presented a resolution providing for four year terms of the State officers.

Mr. Malone of Henry offered a proposition that county boundaries are not to be changed except by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly.

Mr. Whiteside of Calhoun presented an ordinance that no person should be eligible for county superintendent of education who does not hold a first grade certificate.

OF COURSE WE WILL.

One of the greatest journalistic treats ever afforded readers of an Alabama newspaper is in store for the many readers of the Montgomery Advertiser before and during the Constitutional Convention. Arrangements will be made for handling news during this event on a larger scale than ever before attempted by any newspaper in the South. The Advertiser will present the most complete report of each day's proceedings possible to obtain, giving, in fact, almost every detail in the way of speeches verbatim, committee reports in full, roll call of votes on all questions, and the many general topics of interest throughout the fifty days the session is expected to last, beginning May 21st. This will undoubtedly be an achievement in journalism second to none in the country and certainly an enterprise worthy of patronage by the citizens throughout the State everywhere. We would advise interested readers to get your names on the list in time to begin at the opening. Leave your orders at the Banner office, where they will be forwarded promptly and proper attention given. The Advertiser by mail, Daily and Sunday, at the rate of 65 cents per month.

He Is A Wonder.

All who see Mr. C. F. Collier, of Cherokee, Iowa, as he is now, cheerful, erect, vigorous, without an ache, could hardly believe he is the same man, who, a short time ago, had to sit in a chair, propped up by cushions, suffering intensely from an aching back, in agony if he tried to stoop—all caused by chronic kidney trouble, that no medicine helped till he used Electric Bitters and was wholly cured by three bottles. Positively cures Backache, Nervousness, Loss of Appetite, all Kidney troubles. Only 50c at Clanton drug store.

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, and gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucuous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner, who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "SNUFFLES" the GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

"SNUFFLES" is the only perfect CATARRH CURE ever made and is now recognized as the only safe and positive cure for that annoying and disgusting disease. It cures all inflammation quickly and permanently and is also wonderfully quick to relieve HAY FEVER or COLD in the HEAD.

CATARRH when neglected often leads to CONSUMPTION—"SNUFFLES" will save you if you use it at once. It is no ordinary remedy, but a complete treatment which is positively guaranteed to cure CATARRH in any form or stage if used according to the directions which accompany each package. Don't delay but send for it at once, and write full particulars as to your condition, and you will receive special advice from the discoverer of this wonderful remedy regarding your case without cost to you beyond the regular price of "SNUFFLES" the "GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE."

The Pearl and Its Microbe.

Women who are fortunate enough to possess pearls wear them constantly. In so doing it is said that they prevent their being injured by a microbe which attacks them when they are laid away. This little parasite eats through the outer coating of the pearl, destroying its beautiful sheen and leaving only the dull substance underneath.

Girls Take Naturally to Carpentry.

A course of lectures on education was inaugurated the other day in Association hall by the committee on domestic economy in the Woman's Education association. Dr. John Dewey, professor of pedagogy in Chicago university, was the speaker. In the course of his address he said:

"The introduction of domestic economy in the schools is largely along the line of future service for girls, and is a wise innovation. In my experience boys are no more proficient in carpentry work than girls, and the same may be said of cooking in the elementary grades, for it is a child's nature to speculate on what's coming next, and cooking and carpentry offer good subjects in that direction."—Boston Herald.

Chinese Sewing Women.

In nearly all of the principal cities of China native sewing women are to be seen seated on low stools or perhaps on the sidewalk, mending articles of masculine wearing apparel. The accomplishments of these street seamstresses are somewhat limited. Their efforts with the needle being confined as a rule to "running." Other branches of needlework are practically unknown to them. As a consequence their efforts are better appreciated by natives than by American or English travelers. They are never short of patrons among the Chinese tradesmen for these have come to the city to engage in business and have no one to mend a rent for them, their wives being left at home, and they are glad to employ street needle women. For this class of customers the skill of these sewing women answers every purpose.

Golf Gloves.

Golf gloves are hard to find—that is just what one would wish. The heavy kid, with the holes in the back and in the palm to give ventilation, protect the hands very satisfactorily, as do also the gloves of wash leather. But there are some gloves made for golf or for driving that are made of a silk mesh, looking like the crochet or netted work on the purses. These have kid palms, with holes for ventilation. They are cool, wash well, and the kid on the palms protects the hands very satisfactorily. They are expensive and hard to find, but are exceedingly smart for any one who wishes to carry out her fancy of wearing all white. Nothing looks better, for with a pique skirt the ordinary white kid glove of either glace or seude seems out of place, whereas these gloves look what they were designed to look—useful, and made for a certain purpose. The plain white chamois or wash leather serve the purpose when these special golf gloves are not to be found.—Harper's Bazar.

A Housemaid's Club.

The maid servants of Monette, Mo., known as the "Housemaids' Club" for the protection of their own interests. Whenever a member loses her place she brings the matter up before the club, stating her grievances. A vote is taken. If she is sustained the whole club set themselves to work to find her a new position. But the vote must be unanimous. If there is any opposition she leaves the place at her own risk. The girls take pride in keeping up a good standard of work, but the following rules show how fully they look after their own interests:

"1. No restriction is to be placed upon the number of callers that a girl is allowed to entertain. She must be permitted to regulate her visiting list as the mistress regulates hers.

"2. Every evening out, at the maid's pleasure, after 7.30.

"2. No answering of the bell on wash days where there is only one servant in the house.

"4. Every Sunday afternoon out.

"Wages—Not less than $3.25 a week, with board and room.

Summer Shirtwaists.

The raglan shirtwaist is the newest with its sleeve carried up into the collar. The latest sleeve is the easy-fitting bishop with a straight, narrow, cuff lapped over in a point.

A stylish and practical material is the striped Scotch madras in its new colorings, which show a great diversity of choice. Other tailor fabrics are heavy white duck, or butcher's linen. Among the preferred goods, excellent for washable waists are the figured cheviots, or those of plain colors with contrasting borders, fancy pique or corded linen.

Lovely dainty waists are created from the inexhaustible variety of fine cotton textiles, exquisite in their decoration of lace stripes and figures, embroidery, hemstitchings and shirrings.

Among the new imported summer cotton goods are silk-finished French chambrays, flowered and embroidered India mulls and faintly tinted mousseline brilliants.

The season's shirtwaists are generally made without yokes in order to preserve fashion's long lines from shoulder to belt. The fronts, finished with the usual box-plait, are laid in small tucks or plaits in the shoulder seam.

Several varieties of sailor blouse have appeared with the regulation deep collar and shield. One form of collar is developed into revers in front, with the usual sailor-back.

A modification of the Russian blouse is another fashionable model, the overlapping side bordered with Russian embroidery as well as the stock and cuffs.—American Queen.

How Fashions Are Created.

"How are new fashions created?" is a question that must certainly suggest itself now and then to women.

Those unacquainted with Paris chiffon and its mysteries probably suppose that the fashion artist spends much time in studying the harmonious contours of his favorite model, with her elegant figure, reposeful air and graceful attitudes, which lend themselves to the varied manifestations of his genius. They picture her patiently submitting to the enervating manipulations of the essayeuse, who tries, measures, selects and discards according to the capricious combinations of a chief who changes his mind with a suddenness born of genius in search of the ideal. Finally, they fondly imagine, he arrests the essayeuse's movements with a nervous, imperious gesture. He has found his ideal. The new fashion is evolved.

Alas, this romantic conception is seldom realized. A fashion does not, as a rule, emerge—complete, unique, perfect—from the brain of one sartorial genius, however eminent. More often it results from the collation of isolated ideas, which, floating in the ambient air, are studied, analyzed and materialized. But after what efforts, failures and modifications!

Fashions frequently originate in the fertile brains of Montmartre artists, hundreds of whom are constantly designing, inventing and copying. They derive inspiration from pictures of the dogaressas of the fifteenth century, the marquises of the seventeenth century and the elegantes of the empire. These painted beauties furnish their modern sisters with many a lesson in coquetry and adornment. Methods differ in various houses, of course, but as a rule any sketch, idea, design or suggestion is immediately on receipt submitted to the chief. He forms his opinion. Then, discreetly, he consults two or three of his principal collaborators in whose judgment he has perfect confidence. Expert in the art of selection, endowed with an artistic intuition fortified by the ripest commercial and social experience, they are qualified to decide. Should the idea be adopted, the house imparts life and grace to the conception, adapting the picturesque sketch of the artist to its practical purpose—the beautification of a modern belle rich enough to pay for genius applied to la mode.—Washington Star.

Satin foulard is one of the smartest of spring fabrics.

Polka dote and hemstitching are prominent features of the latest neckwear.

Mercerized linens are the top-notch of the mode for the coming shirtwaist.

Gold effects, finished with gold ferret buttons, are salient features of the newest waist girdles.

Blue and black lisle stockings for spring, with three embroidered clocks, come for wear with tan Oxfords.

All bishop sleeves for shirtwaists have narrow bandlike cuffs, so the link cuff buttons may be laid away.

Chiffon, net and point d'esprit fichus are to be more worn this summer than last, but sailor collars and revers will be quite passe.

Lace has only a secondary place as a trimming this season, even the sheerest of materials being ornamented with embroidery instead.

Three shaped flounces, one overlapping the other about two inches, and covering a space of 18 inches from the hem up, make a very pretty skirt trimming.

Embroidered mulls and batistes in white come in a variety of dainty designs for blouse waists which require no trimming or tucking beyond a little edge for the finish of the collar and cuffs.

It is prophesied that straps will be the favored shirtwaist garniture of the season, and next the perfectly plain design will be the vogue. Except for the very diaphanous fancy ones, tucks, it is said, are to be relegated to second place.

The different shades of red are all fashionable this spring, and some of the smartest gowns that as yet have been exhibited are of this vivid coloring, toned down sometimes by elaborate trimmings of ecru or guipure lace, again left open with no relief.

A novelty is a waistcoat of yellow lace. It is made with a very long pointed front, builded over chameleon velvet or satin, the color of the lace. It is buttoned with handsome metal buttons, and the top edge is finished with a binding of gold braid or Persian embroidery or velvet.

Ruffles will be used in abundance on the skirts of gowns this summer. The newest ruffled gowns have the ruffles quite untrimmed, but they are applied to the skirt in rows far enough apart to show very distinctly the pretty lace insertion that serves as a heading to each flounce.

Slumber Street.

Oh! miles and miles of beds in a row,
Acres of coverlets white as snow,
Pillows and pillows, and sheets galore,
Blankets and quilts by the hundred score—
Ah! these are the sights that each night greet
The children who go to Slumber Street.

Hush-a-byes, hush-a-byes, soft and low;
Rhythmical murmurs, both fast and slow;
Ditties and hymn tunes, and ballads rare;
Melodies gay, and with plaintive air;
Lullabies tender and soft and sweet—
This is the music of Slumber Street.

Visions delightful, happy and gay,
Of wonderful toys and merry play;
Fanciful pictures of rare delight,
Of verdant fields and skies that are bright—
Oh! these are the dreams the children meet
Who travel each night to Slumber Street.

Oh! scores upon scores of weary heads
Peacefully resting in miles of beds!
Each pair of eyelids is closed up tight,
And each pair of eyes is hid from sight,
Resting bodies and tired little feet—
This is the business of Slumber Street.

A Dog That Answers Fire Calls.

The city of Lexington, Ky., has a fire dog that answers to the name of "Nice." For three years Nice has not missed attendance at a fire and he can always be counted upon to run yelping down the street ahead of the clattering engines. Of course he adds greatly to the excitement of the occasion. Nice was taken in by the firemen several years ago when he came begging at the engine-house door for a morsel of food. He was a tramp dog then, but he is sleek and fat now, for he has the best of living. When the telephone bell rings Nice pricks up his ears and awaits the announcement of the alarm tender. His ear is so well trained that he can tell by the tender's words whether it is an alarm or not. If it is an alarm he rushes toward the doors and as soon as they are opened goes yelping down the street. The Lexington firemen would not accept anything in trade for Nice.

A Pound of Feathers.

A famous old catch-question for unwary boys is, "Which is heavier, a pound of feathers of a pound of lead?" Of course the unwary boys answer, "A pound of lead," and then everybody laughs, for how can a pound of one thing be heavier than a pound of some other thing? But the people that do the laughing are just as much in error as the boys are, only it is the other way about, for a pound of feathers is, as a matter of fact, heavier than a pound of lead.

Here is the way to demonstrate it. With perfectly accurate scales, weigh a pound of lead, using ordinary shot for convenience. With the same scales weigh a pound of feathers, putting them in a muslin bag for the purpose, and being very careful that the bag and the feathers together weigh exactly one pound.

Place the shot in one pan of a balance, and the bag of feathers in the other, and they will presently come to an exact level. Thus it seems that they weigh exactly the same. But a different state of things is shown if the balance, with the shot and the feathers undisturbed, be placed on the receiver of an air-pump and covered with the glass bell-jar. When the air has been exhausted the feathers will sink, and the shot will go up, thus showing that the feathers are the heavier.

The explanation is that no account has been taken of the buoyant power of the air, which bears everything up in proportion to the thing's bulk. As the bag of feathers is of greater bulk than the shot, it is supported by the air to a greater extent than the shot, and it, therefore, takes more than a pound of feathers to balance a pound of lead. In the air-pump, however, there is no such support, and the difference is at once apparent.

The Right Kind of a Boy.

The other morning we were in the midst of a three days' rain. The fire smoked, the dining-room was chilly, and, when we assembled for breakfast, papa looked rather grim, and mamma tired; for the baby had been restless all night. Polly was plainly inclined to fretfulness, and Bridget was undeniably cross, when Jack came in with the breakfast rolls from the baker's. He had taken off his rubber coat and boots in the entry, and he came in rosy and smiling.

"Here's the paper, sir," said he to his father, with such a cheerful tone that his father's brow relaxed; and he said, "Ah, Jack, thank you," quite pleasantly.

His mother looked up at him smiling, and he just touched her cheek gently as he passed.

"Top of the morning to you, Pollywog," he said to his little sister, and delivered the rolls to Bridget, with a "Here you are, Bridget. Aren't you sorry you didn't go yourself this beautiful day?"

He gave the fire a poke and opened a damper. The smoke ceased, and presently the coals began to glow; and five minutes after Jack came in we gathered around the table, and were eating our oatmeal as cheerily as possible. This seems very simple in the telling, and Jack never knew he had done anything at all; but he had, in fact, changed the whole moral atmosphere of the room, and had started a gloomy day pleasantly for five people.

"He is always so," said his mother, when I spoke to her about it afterward, "just so sunny and kind and ready all the time. I suppose there are more brilliant boys in the world than mine, but none with a kinder heart or a sweeter temper. I am sure of that."—Our Dumb Animals.

Black Hawk and the Young Lieutenant.

Black Hawk was an Indian chief, ruler of the Sacs and Foxes who lived in the northwestern part of Illinois many years ago. In 1832 Black Hawk led his tribe in war against the white settlers to resist the attempt of the United States government to move his people to a reservation west of the Mississippi river. The United States sent many soldiers into Illinois to overcome the red men and several battles were fought. Among the soldiers from Illinois was a young man over six feet tall and as awkward as he was tall. He was Abraham Lincoln, afterward president of the United States. In the forces of the white men was a young lieutenant from the state of Mississippi. He was only 23 years old, but was bright and alert. No sooner had the old chief, Black Hawk, seen this young officer than he took a decided liking to him and the lieutenant also rejoiced in the friendship of the Indian. Black Hawk was captured and taken to Washington to be shown the strength of the white men and later was sent back to his people, who had been removed to the reservation prepared for them. The friendship between the old chief and the young lieutenant continued through all these trials until Black Hawk died. That young lieutenant was Jefferson Davis, afterward president of the government formed by the seceding southern states.

The Family That Kissed a Cow.

She was the most winsome little lassie, and she lived in a tiny village in the very heart of the Blue Ridge. The sunshine had crept into the dancing brown curls on her head, and had lingered there. Her eyes reflected the blue of the tender skies that bent above her.

It was such an event in her life to go with auntie to the big, far-away city. There were so many wonderful things that her little country-bred eyes had never seen. And oh, the letter that she wrote home!

Elizabeth's family were so impatient that morning for little black Mozell to return from the village post-office! They knew the letter would be there, for Elizabeth had promised.

Elizabeth's father, the village doctor, walked back and forth the length of the sitting room; her big sister had a sewing girl waiting for her in the sewing room; her mother—but mothers always have their hands full; even her big brother put down his newspaper, looked from the window, and said he must be going; but he did not budge.

Wasn't it strange that the letter of such a tiny girl could hold them there? Wasn't it strange that not one of them acknowledged to another why he stayed? When little Mozell came running in, bringing the papers and letters, they all drew a little nearer to Elizabeth's mamma.

It was a sweet letter, that told of a little girl's joy at her first peep at the great world. There were loving messages to her home people, and it ended, "and kiss the cow."

"What a child!" her father said, picking up the letter that had been written with such care.

"What a baby!" her brother said.

"To think of kissing beauty!" said the big sister, as she swept from the room.

But her mother said softly, "The dear child!"

And then they separated, going to their delayed work.

Out in the meadow, Beauty looked up from the tender grass she was chopping, to find the doctor standing near her.

"I don't like to do it," he muttered "but——" He stooped over and laid his mustached lips on Beauty's polished horn. He chose the horn because it looked so clean.

Not many minutes later a young man came hurriedly through the gate, casting many looks behind to be sure he was unobserved.

"Kwe!" but he planted a gingerly kiss on Beauty's back and beat a retreat.

It was some hours later when the big sister slipped out to the meadow, gave Beauty a hurried kiss, and ran back.

When Elizabeth's mamma came out to give Beauty a kiss, she threw her arms about her neck and kissed her right on the forehead; and two great tears rolled down her cheeks—her dear little girl was so far away!

It isn't on record, but Beauty must have wondered why the family had suddenly grown so affectionate, for at milking time they all, on one excuse or another, came to the milkingbars.

The little colored girl stood at Beauty's head, thinking of the message she had heard in the morning, and when the cow lifted her head and looked around on them with mildly wondering eyes, she kissed her right on her mealy nose.

"Child," Elizabeth's mother asked, "what are you doing?"

"She said kiss her, an' I jes' natchally knows white folks wouldn't kiss a cow," the little negress said.

Elizabeth's family looked a each other guiltily, and then how they laughed!—Youth's Companion.

PROPER FERTILIZER FOR TURNIPS.

It is said that for some soils barnyard manure to which a little superphosphate has been added seems to be a very desirable fertilizer for turnips. This is undoubtedly true of soils of mineral origin which have previously been subjected to careless farming.

HAVE GOOD PASTURES FOR STOCK

The farmer who is not willing to increase his crops and improve in his system of farming should not purchase pure-bred stock, as it will not pay to transfer a good animal from a luxuriant pasture to a barren farm. Good breeds demand the best of pastures and care in feeding, but they not only pay for the better treatment but also give a profit.

BEES HATCHING HENS' EGGS

An Illinois beekeeper has contrived a plan of hatching chicks by placing the eggs on top of the brood nest, directly over the cluster of bees, of his bee hives. Out of one hundred fertile eggs he claims every one hatched a good strong chick. At first thought this may seem a little startling, but the plan no doubt is feasible, when we consider that the normal temperature of a beehive is 100 degrees, which is nearly the right temperature required to incubate eggs. The time required to produce a worker bee from the egg is twenty-one days, the same as that of a chick.

This certainly promises to be a step in advance. There can be no risk of roasting the eggs, as is often the case with an incubator, and on the other hand the danger of the eggs being deserted by freaky hens will be done away with, but we must not forget that bees are sometimes freaky, too. A beehive would probably accommodate in the neighborhood of four dozen eggs at one time.—F. G. Honnon in New England Homestead.

THE CULTIVATION OF CELERY

The seeds may be started in a hot bed for early crops the plants to be transplanted as soon as they will bear handling, which is when they are about five or six inches high. When started in the open land a sheltered place should be selected. The best method for transplanting is this, to plant in trenches which are dug about one and one-half feet deep, one foot wide and the bottom filled six or eight inches with well rotted manure. This should be covered with good soil well mixed with manure to a depth of about three inches and trodden down slightly to make it more compact, after this there should be two or three inches of good soil added to set the plants. The plants after being taken from seed bed and succors removed should be set six to eight inches apart in rows. The trenches in drills should be three feet apart. Draw the earth around the plants as they advance in growth but leave the top until the final soiling. This earthing should be kept dry; an occasional application of salt will improve the quality. The soil should be kept loose around the plants and liquid manure frequently added; from the middle of August to the middle of September being the most favorable time for growing it. A moderate or light frost will not hurt celery, but whenever a heavy frost is anticipated it should be looked after; it is best however to leave it out as long as possible. About four or five weeks before celery is wanted for table use, the stalks should be blanched by covering with soil so as to entirely exclude the light. This operation consists in banking up the plants with earth on each side nearly or quite to the top. When celery is to be sent to market late in fall or early in winter it is generally stored in trenches.—The Epitomist.

PIG FEEDING EXPERIMENTS

The elaborate pig feeding experiments conducted at Came under the auspices of the Agricultural Committee of the Wilts County Council have served to bring out in striking fashion the materials and mixtures that constitute the most effective and profitable feed for pigs. The influences of the different rations were measured and compared by all conceivable standards, and farmers aiming at the profitable production of good bacon pigs can scarcely be wrong in applying the lessons of these experiments in their piggeries. On a general estimate of the results the most effective and remunerative ration was that composed of maize meal, potatoes and separated milk. This mixture was the cheapest and gave the largest increase both in live and carcass weight.

The next best ration consisted of barley meal, potatoes, and separated milk, and though it cost more, weight for weight, and was less effectual in promoting growth than the maize ration, this mixture yielded a much superior quality carcass, and by reason of this fact was little inferior to the other as a profit yielding feed. It was shown that potatoes might be omitted from either ration, but not advantageously, by the addition of potatoes. A very useful feed is a mixture of maize and barley meals with potatoes and separated milk. Barley is a most effective ingredient in raising the quality of the carcass for ewing purposes, and the economic value of separated milk is distinctly shown. Maize encourages growth and flesh development, but produces a poor quality bacon unless a counteracting material such as barley is given with it. Crushed oats, bean meal, and pea meal were not economic ingredients, all being too costly for the return obtained.—London Morning-Post.

SPRAYING POTATOES AND FRUIT TREES.

It is no longer a question of whether or not it pays to spray, for this has long been settled in the affirmative. Nearly all experiments show that it does, although some seasons it pays better than others. The time and method of application and the materials to be used are important. For fruit trees one spraying before the buds open, using bordeaux mixture, is advisable to prevent scab and rust. Then give another, to which is added paris green for the codling moth, as soon as the blossoms are nearly all off. One or two applications thereafter at intervals of ten days to two weeks of the same mixture will generally be all that is necessary.

For potatoes the same materials are used—the bordeaux to prevent rot and the paris green to kill bugs. The pumps must be started in fact, much earlier than is the practice. As soon as the mostly up give them an application of weak bordeaux and repeat five to seven times at intervals of days each. This will prevent the vines from getting a foothold and in prevention that are more polished. The paris green may be used as needed. With the pumps which cover four rows at a time from twenty to thirty acres over in a day of ten hours at expense of labor.

The spray must be distributed. A heavy drops runs off and as much as a fine green is consumed one pound to one two hundred gallons of potatoes and apples made by shaking one lime in water, the twenty-five gallons pounds sulphate of copper gallons water and we mix the two.

COUNT EGGS BY THE MILLION.

Chicago Dealers Discuss Recent Big Order from the East.

South Water street men the other day discussed the recent order of an eastern man for 2,400,000 dozen eggs to be supplied by the commission men of the west, says the Chicago Chronicle. This order runs into big figures and counted in eggs or dozens it looks large. At any rate, it means, even at the price of 10 cents per dozen, a transaction of nearly $250,000. The eastern buyer is undoubtedly making his purchase for cold storage purposes, and will calculate to make his profit on the advance in price next winter. Commission men are recalling the transaction last season by which Cudahy of Omaha and Chicago parties collected and stored several millions of dozens of eggs which were afterward sold at the winter price and at a handsome profit. When talking about a recent offer made to the convention of Kansas and Oklahoma commission men to buy 2,400,000 dozen eggs several South Water street dealers said that such an order could be easily handled by commission firms in the ordinary business way. One was of the opinion that there are firms doing business with headquarters in Chicago that would not be stumped if called upon to furnish twice that quantity in the course of a couple of months. They would simply set to work among country and call for all that could be supplied at stated times.

Mother Hints.

Mothers often complain that their babies do not appear really ill, and yet do not grow and look as healthy as they should. The dieffrence between a healthy and an unhealthy child is very marked. A perfectly healthy baby sleeps a great deal of the time during the first few months of its life, and when it is asleep wears an expression of absolute and blissful repose. The little eyelids are completely closed, the lips very slightly parted and the breathing is rhythmic and scarcely to be heard. There is no visible movement of the nostrils in the healthy baby while sleeping. When a young baby sleeps with the eyelids incompletely closed, so that the whites of the eyes show, be sure that something is wrong. When the baby's rest is broken by pain, even colic, the eyelids will twitch, and the eyes will not completely close. But the same symptoms indicate often the appearance of a severe illness, so that the mother should always be on guard.

LIVE WASHINGTON NOTES

Happenings of the Week at the Nation's Capital.

OUR CORRESPONDENT'S WEEKLY LETTER.

The Federal Constitution Interpreted—What English Papers Think of the United States—Statement of Cuba's Foreign Trade.

The Supreme Court of the United States decides that the constitution does not follow the flag. This decision is the most important that this great tribunal has ever made, and is in favor of the government. The court goes back to the period in which the Republic was formed and the constitution framed and endeavors to ascertain what was the intent of the founders of the nation. The opinion of the majority of the court disposes of the uniform taxation clause of the constitution in this manner:

"The framers of the constitution in writing that clause had no thought of its application to territorial possessions. No such question as is now presented had arisen in their minds. The clause 'all duties, imposts and exercises shall be uniform throughout the United States,' was placed in the constitution to prevent any state or combination of states securing advantage over another or others; to prevent the ports of one state gaining preference over those of another in importation. This rule was made primarily for the states united, not for territories then possessed or afterwards acquired, and the constitutional requirement is satisfied that on all duties are uniformly imposed at all the ports throughout the United States. The advantage of this uniformity may be extended to territories and possessions not states and not members of the American union, but that is for Congress to determine under authority of the constitution."

The Saturday Review published in London says:

"The Monroe doctrine, triply exaggerated, and the rejection of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty are the means by which South America is to fight off the power of European designs. The North Americans will try to bully and cajole her into denying Germany the lease of a small coaling station. Soon Europe will not be able to speak in South America without asking the permission of the United States. But we fancy South America would prefer even the attentions of Europe to those of their friends in the north. It is pleasant for Europe to be menanced with the commercial fist and the mailed fist of America at the same time."

A statement by the Division of Insular Affairs, War Department, shows that the total value of merchandise imported into Cuba during the first ten months of 1900 was $55,149,159, and for the same period of 1899 $54,325,732, an increase of $823,377. The exports of merchandise also show an increase. The figures for the period stated of 1899 were $40,893,638; for 1900, $41,438,955; increase, $56,317. Cuba's trade with the United States show a decrease of $487,456 in imports and $6,438,607 in exports. The marked decrease in the value of exports to the United States and an apparently large increase in the exportation to European countries is explained by the War Department by the fact that in 1899 shipments for Europe were consigned to New York for re-exportation.

President Diaz of Mexico may be appealed to if President McKinley and Secretary Hay are unable to bring the disputants over the second Pan-American Congress together. President Diaz is as eager as President McKinley to bring about a harmonious understanding between the nations of the new world, and views with suspicion the part that Europe is playing in the game. It is understood that Peru and Bolivia have received assurance from Europe of financial aid in recovering their lost provinces, and a way to the sea if these nations succeed in so manipulating the forthcoming Pan-American Congress as to force arbitration on Chili.

President Roca, of Argentina, intends to visit the Buffalo Exposition. He will also consult President McKinley upon various South American questions.

"THE NEW KING COLE."

Old King Cole was a merry old soul,
And a merry old soul was he;
He called for his pipe—but instead of a glass—
He called for LION COFFEE.
For Old King Cole was a shrewd old soul
And he couldn't be fooled on brands,
"LION" got his vote, for it has no cost—
On its merits alone it stands.

Old King Cole had a wise old poll,
And a wise old poll had he,
He ate and he drank foods of highest rank—
So he favored LION COFFEE.
And he knew 'twas best, by a varied test—
That millions of homes it pleased.
LION COFFEE grand was the only brand
That his appetite appeased.

If Old King Cole could have control
Today of the public mind,
No Coffee brand but the "LION" grand
On the market we could find.
And the LION heads whose value spreads
Satisfaction through the land,
Would be bringing grist from the Premium List
Given with the LION brand!

In every package of LION COFFEE you will find a fully illustrated and descriptive list. No housekeeper, in fact, no woman, man, boy or girl will fail to find in the list some article which will contribute to their happiness, comfort and convenience, and which they may have by simply cutting out a certain number of Lion Heads from the wrappers of our one pound sealed packages (which is the only form in which this excellent coffee is sold).

WINTER BILE

Causes bilious head-ache, back-ache and all kinds of body aches. Spring is here and you want to get this bile poison out of your system, easily, naturally and gently. CASCARETS are just what you want; they never grip or gripe, but will work gently while you sleep. Some people think the more violent the griping the better the cure. Be careful—take care of your bowels—salts and pill poisons leave them weak, and even less able to keep up regular movements than before. The only safe, gentle cleaner for the bowels are sweet, fragrant CASCARETS. They don't force out the foecal matter with violence, but act as a tonic on the whole 30 feet of bowel wall, strengthen the muscles and restore healthy, natural action—buy them and try them. You will find in an entirely natural way your bowels will be promptly and permanently put in good order for the Spring and Summer work.

Since the days of the Farmers' Alliance I believe this Association is the best move that has been made by farmers for their own protection. Good luck to it, say I.

In the corner some of the boys are mildly kicking because up to the present the constitutional convention has not been exciting enough for them. Hold on, boys, this is only the preliminary canter, presently it will be off with a rush, then you will have to go too fast sor you.

It is believed we have struck oil here and we are "oil" right; two companies have been doing here strongly organized with money. I and a number of others, all this is in [illegible]. The formation of the country too resembles that of Cuba in where oil has been found. Our State geologist produced some specimens of iron ore sent from here to be fifty per cent iron.

A large saw mill site has been located here that will be built on the creek by Sparks, Ensign and Hitchcock, capitalists of New York, who have been there some time looking after investments. Our enterprising town here gives the arrivals of summer novelties, like the [illegible] dry grocery, they [illegible] mention. With [illegible] director of whom we just spoke of T. U. TO CURE A COLD IN ONE DAY

Take Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box. 25c.

Thorsby, June 2, 1901

Editor Banner:—Seeing some funny gyrations in the "Reflector" some weeks since from Thorsby, over the signature of "M" prompts us to come forth and speak out in open "meetin" with one desire only, that to adjust matters in their true light, expressing our utter contempt for that class of individuals who manifest a low cantankerous disposition to get themselves before the public in print by a cowardly thrust in the dark, mixing some truth with falsehood, and some wise man has said that the truth half told is the worst character of lies, and so it is in this instance wherein said M, alias the Ghost, parades a matter of small moment even to those concerned, which with time, sense and a disposition to do unto others as you would like they should do unto you will bring an amicable adjustment and it is only the lowest, smallest, meanest kind of principle in anyone to take up a matter and distort the facts, magnifying "molehills into mountains," indulging in mean, scurrilous and defamatory remarks that only tends to agravate its intended victim, and again what cares the public abroad about local matters of small moment all intelligent people know that such stuff only appeals to such as only like to feed on filth.

Now, again Mr. Editor, allow me to say that Thorsby is a nice, clean, bright, beautiful, little town and is making healthy strides forward, and we frankly admit that this progress and improvement is almost entirely due to those people who have come from the Northern states seeking homes in our own genial Southland, and all sensible, broad minded people heartily welcome them among us. Now, we admit that there are a few narrow minded fools on both sides like "M" for instance, but happily they are only few, weak and and uninfluential, and so are hardly to be considered.

Yes, we welcome all good people to come in our midst, whether Northern, Southern, Eastern or Western come with or without money, come with your brawn and brain, with some ideas of progress and improvement, and if you are looking for a place where these qualifications will count you will see at once what can be done here. Yes, Thorsby is not an idler's town, not a dreamer's land, but you will see nearly all the folks on the hustle, and you will see evidences of Labor's magic wand in the creation of bright beautiful residences interspersed throughout the town, rendered more beautiful and attractive still as they are surrounded by gardens, lawns, etc., extended by orchards, vineyards and fields, strongly convincing the intelligent observer that we have the garden spot of Alabama.

And last, but not least, comes the Normal college, and we dare say that few people have an adequate conception of its magnitude and importance to this section, supplied with the facilities it will command, with a capacity for over 300 students.

So let us close by saying that we hope to see or hear of no more insidious flings from "M" or anyone; let us look to, and work for higher, more noble and better things, that we may bear an humble part in life's great work of uplifting humanity, thus becoming instruments in God's hands for helping and blessing our fellows.

Our Sunday-school here is still progressing nicely and will continue to do so as long as they have such men as Prof. Rasco for our teacher and Mr. W. A. Mims our superintendent to talk to us with so much kindness.

Mr. T. U. Crumpton will give us a talk on the Holy Land the second Sunday in June at 10 o'clock a. m.; we would like for everyone to come and hear him and don't fail; don't say I can hear him next Sunday at New Salem which will be the third, but come and you can learn something each day; you never get too old to learn something of the Holy Land; and study the Holy Land between now and then so you can learn more when you hear him talk. And may God be with you all.

We had a nice time Sunday in conference, trying to serve God.

Cedar Grove.

Messrs. James Collins and James Riggins made a business trip to Montgomery Monday.

Owing to the abundance of rain some of our farmers are getting behind with their work.

Mr. Henry Eiland made a business trip to Clinton Saturday.

Messrs. Jesse Hayes, J. W. Hayes, J. L. Baker, Newt Waller, Harvey Wilson and Mrs. Alpha Hayes went to Clanton Monday on business.

Mr. J. G. Hayes and family visited Mr. Joe Duncan Sunday.

Miss Annie Hayes visited Miss Etta Duncan of near Loxax Sunday; reported having an enjoyable visit.

By close observation we are persuaded to believe that it is not altogether the interest that Messrs. Robert and Oscar Beane has in our Sunday-school that causes their regular attendance.

As news is scarce this week we are necessarily brief.

As I am a new writer from this section, I don't know how the people will like my letters. But when I find children's day in embryo it gives me better hope, especially when I see the little folks taught by such a logical, self-controlling fair maiden. She does not only teach them their Sunday school lesson but her sweet voice is heard every Sunday morning teaching them the science of vocal music.

Miss Addie Fowley spent Sunday with her friend, Miss Naomi Williams.

Give lemonade on children's day for those who will promise to never die.

Wednesday night always brings thoughts of some speeches that are moving, soothing and lasting; moving because it moves them out of the house; soothing because it put the rest to sleep; lasting because those that heard it never want to hear it again. Ignorance is the wet nurse of prejudice. Men marry to make an end, women a beginning.

Some of our people oppose the the third Sunday exercise, but some people are like barrel hoops, all around everything and in nothing.

The woman who marries for spite usually gets it.

Hoping to have a bustling time on the third Saturday, I remain.

We are having most too much rain in this section, unless the farmers were better up with their work.

G. W. Jones, and Job Mims, of Prattville, visited relatives here last week. P. H Conoell and wife, attended service at Providence, in Coosa, Sunday. Messrs. J. E Goss, David Kindrick, T. L. Robinson, Lee Robinson and Miss Amma Robinson, attended the all-day singing at Coosa River, Sunday.

T. P. McKinney, and daughters, Misses Chestina and Minnie, attended service at Chestnut Creek Sunday. Hah! Hah! I am amused at the Kid and the Lion, I thought I would venture up a little, but I'm afraid the Kid will butt me, and afraid The Lion will bite me, so I will stand aloof and let them have it. Any way I think there is a little wavering in some of it.

SAME OLD IKE.

When you start out to "tackle" the finny tribe don't forget to take a bottle of Dr. Tichenor's Antiseptic. Your druggist can sell it as fast as you can buy it. Price 50c.

Rev.—Neely preached an interesting sermon at this place Sunday.

Quite a number of our people attended preaching at Chestnut Creek Sunday and report a fine sermon that isn't uncommon for Rev. Thomas.

The singing at Mr. Greer's Sunday evening was enjoyed by all present.

There was quite an interesting scene on the public road Sunday, a man and his wife started out on about a twelve mile trip on foot, carrying their two children in a wheel barrow.

The infant child of Mr and Mrs. Pink Devaughn is quite sick, but we hope it will soon recover.

Prof. J. N. Goss of Burwell was up here Sunday. MORNING STAR.

SLANTON, - - - ALABAMA.

The marvellous inventions of the past twenty years have revolutionized many things. But in spite of the threats of extinction it begins to look as if no mechanical devices will completely supersede those friends in emergency, the horse and the jack knife.

Never before in the history of the United States was there so much gold in the National Treasury as is now stored in the vaults at Washington; indeed, no other institution in the world has so much of the yellow metal as the Government of the American Republic possesses.

All appearances indicate that Russia has acquired a hold upon the commerce of Persia which England, her rival in that field of trade, cannot destroy. To encourage this trade Russia is now paying a bounty upon every pound of Russian commodities that are taken over the frontier to be sold in Persia.

A special agent of the United States department of agriculture reports that beyond doubt grain can be matured anywhere in Alaska. Barley, oats, wheat and rye have developed perfectly from seed accidentally sown and grown wild. Flax of good quality has also been grown.

France still holds the record for national debt. She owes $151 per capita. Great Britain stands second and owes $91 per capita. Germany is third with a debt of $65 per capita. The United States has the smallest debt of all the great nations, and owes only $28 per capita.

The old fashioned hulks which serve as training schools are anything but proper and fitting schools for prospective crews of modern men-o'-war. An aspirant for naval honors, however industrious and ambitious, might serve for years on such archaic training craft as the Hartford or Mohican without arriving at more than a vague general idea of sea duty on board the Alabama or Kearsarge, states the Philadelphia Record.

It is a singular thing that a surplus in the national treasury causes almost as much anxiety as that unfamiliar condition, a deficit, would. Whatever money accumulates either in the treasury or in private hands is withdrawn from general use and tends to disturb business conditions. Moreover idle money, with nations as with individuals, is always a temptation to extravagance. Still very few of us are so afraid of getting a little money ahead.

Augustus B. Wylie, in his "Modern Abyssinia," describes an interesting custom observed at Yejju, by which a long engagement is brought to a happy ending. The betrothed pair go secretly to the outskirts of a village. The man hides himself, and the girl shrieks. The first man who comes to her rescue is speared by her sweetheart. The couple may then go home and be married, for moral sentiment demands that every bridegroom should have killed his man.

An inquiry made by a number of German officers with a view to test the intelligence of a new batch of conscripts brought forth some remarkable results. Out of seventy-eight recruits from various parts of Prussia twenty-one were unable to give any answer when asked who was the Emperor of Germany; twenty-two replied that "a great general" and nine of them thought "a renowned Field Marshal" was the wielder of the destinies of the empire; six imagined that "the Minister of War" was their liege lord, while only fourteen gave approximately correct replies.

Earl Roberts's tribute to the marked superiority of the American wagons used in the South African campaign over all other wagons is no surprise to any one who knows anything about wagons. It is a tribute to two things—to the American hickory tree, which yields a wood for spokes that combines lightness with strength as no other wood does, and to American constructive ingenuity, which has evolved the proper form for a buck wagon. It is worth noting that Earl Roberts calls attention to the fact that the American wagons were cheaper than the English wagons, as well as better. This is a new reminder to the British manufacturer of a state of things which has for some time filled his mind with sadness and dread.

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

Further Report of Alabama's Constitutional Convention.

Fifth Day.

The Committees Named—List of the Chairmen—Williams of Elmore Gets His Coveted Seat.

One hundred and twenty-one delegates were present at monday's session. After approving the journal, the rules were reported by the president as adopted by the rules committee. They were discussed and adopted, amendments being made in unimportant particulars.

The president announced the standing committees with chairmen as follows: Judiciary, Smith, of Mobile; order and harmony, White, of Jefferson; suffrage and elections, Coleman, of Green; legislative department, Oates, of Montgomery; local legislation, O'Neal, of Lauderdale; education, Graham, of Talladega; taxation, Browne, of Talladega; executive department, Jones, of Montgomery; declaration of rights, Lomax, of Montgomery; corporations, Harrison, of Lee; representation, Pitts, of Dallas; exemptions, Howze, of Jefferson; militia, Wilson, of Clark; banks, Fletcher, of Madison; corporations, Weakley, of Lauderdale; state and county boundaries, Parker, of Cullman; impeachments, Hood, of Etowah; amendments and miscellaneous provisions, Foster, of Tuskaloosa; journal, Proctor, of Jackson; schedules, Heflin, of Randolph.

Several resolutions were offered and referred to the committees. The rules are adopted and committees appointed and work will now begin in earnest.

The democratic caucus convened at four in the afternoon, and after due consideration voted unanimously to admit A. E. Williams, of Elmore.

It is the general opinion that it will take the full time for which delegates are to be paid, fifty days, and perhaps longer to complete the work before the convention. It is going to take long and patient work to frame an instrument that can with confidence be submitted to the people for ratification.

Sixth Day.

Settled Down to Hard Work—A Dry Session — Ordinances Submitted—Jones on Suffrage.

The convention got down to work this morning with rapidity, a large number of ordinances being introduced and referred to appropriate committees.

The feature of the session was an ordinance offered by ex-Governor Jones, of Montgomery, to amend the suffrage clause of the present constitution, denying the right to vote to "any person who shall hereafter be convicted of selling his own vote or buying or bartering the vote of another in any legal election, primary, caucus or convention held to nominate persons for public office, or who shall make or aid in making any false count, certificates or returns as to the result of such election, or who shall thereafter carry concealed weapons and be convicted thereof." It also disqualifies from voting any person guilty of treason, idiots and insane, also to change habitual drunkenness to use of liquor to such extent as to become notorious.

Prominent among other ordinances were:

By Mr. Kirk—To make the terms of state officers four years.

By Mr. Kirkland—That all elections be held at the same time and no officer eligible to succeed himself.

By Mr Hodges—That no power to levy taxes shall be authorized to a corporation or individual except special tax of not more than one fourth per cent for school purposes.

By Mr Howell—To give the General Assembly power to fix the area of counties at 400 square miles.

By Mr. Howze—To create office of Lieutenant-Governor.

By Mr. McDonald — That electors must read and write and understand the English language

By Mr. Williams, of Marengo—To abolish the offices of Justices of the Peace.

By Mr. Wilson, of Clarke—To define the qualifications of voters in primary elections.

By Mr. O'Neal—Military duty of all persons between 18 and 45 years of age; also office-holders must be from the white race.

Mr. Oates presented the Morgan plan of suffrage, which was ordered printed and referred to the Suffrage Committee.

Seventh Day.

Batch of Ordinances Introduced — Appeal Read from Colored Citizens of the State.

Roll call on the seventh day showed 136 members of the constitutional convention present. During today's session Mr. Bulger introduced an ordinance on the public school system fixing the poll tax at $1.50 and dividing the school fund between the races in proportion as it is paid by the races. Another ordinance to the same end was introduced by Mr. Cardon providing that the school fund be divided between the races in such proportions as the trustees think best.

An ordinance was introduced by Mr. Eyster reducing the minimum area of counties from 600 to 400 square miles.

A flood of ordinances was introduced relating to taxation by counties being limited to half of 1 per cent.

Mr. Beddow introduced an ordinance to preserve the right of trial by jury, but three-fourths of jury shall make a verdict.

Mr. Ferguson offered an ordinance to give the legislature the right to grant license for carrying small arms.

Mr. Howze presented an ordinance that judges having criminal jurisdiction in the state be paid by the state.

Mr. Beavers presented an ordinance to adhere to the suffrage clause of the constitution of the United States.

Other ordinances related to filling vacancies in county offices by election; no passing of ex post facto laws; the General Assembly to amend charters of corporations; cities or towns not to issue bonds for more than 10 per cent of the value of property; to fix the age of poll tax from 21 to 60 years; to exempt ex Confederate soldiers from license tax; to legalize primary elections and to fix representation on population; to make teachers' salaries preferred claims.

The convention created the office of reading clerk at $6 per day.

An open letter from Booker Washington and other colored citizens to the convention was read. This letter is an appeal for fair treatment for the race.

Eighth Day.

Nothing but Ordinances — Railroad Commission — Convict Inspectors — Against Lobbying.

Because of a resolution reported by the committee on rules and adopted by the convention, the body will hereafter meet daily at 10 a. m. and will stand adjourned at 1 p. m. By this action the convention will be in session but three hours of each day, but it is essential for the committees to meet daily and some of them have lengthy sessions, so that for several days the great bulk of the work of the convention will be performed in committee rooms.

Six committees have selected clerks, and the committee on revision of the journal has asked for one. All the committees may want a clerk in another week. The committees have just gotten to work, but no ordinances have yet been reported.

One hundred and thirty-one delegates were present at this day's session. Ex-Governor Jones presented ordinances to provide for sessions of the General Assembly every four years; to provide against lobbying by making it a penal offence; to make railroad commissioners and convict inspectors elective, paying them out of the state treasury, and rendering them ineligible for re-election, fixing the term at four years and giving them plenary power to fix rates; to make register in chancery elective; to abolish chancery courts and to give the Governor power to appoint an attorney.

An ordinance by Mr. Robinson prohibits any special appropriation over $500, except by two-thirds vote of each house.

An ordinance was introduced reducing the mileage of members of the legislature and members of electoral college from 10 to 3 cents per mile.

Mr. Ashcraaft introduced the following: "To organize the whites and negroes into separate school districts without regard to each other, with separate territory and officers; also for special local taxation divided between the races in proportion to what each pays; the taxation on coporrate property to be divided between races proportionate to the color of the stock-holders."

Adjourned at 1 p. m.

Ninth Day.

Oates' Resolution Caused Discussion No Report from Committees Adjourned till June 3rd.

One hundred and eighty-five ordinances have been introduced upon almost every subject in the present constitution, some of them are in its exact language. To meet this flood the committee on rules reported favorably on the resolution of Gen. Oates' to adopt the present constitution as a basis for the framing of a new one, and that ordinances or resolutions shall be to amend or change the present constitution. This provoked much discussion and was finally recommitted to be amended to meet objections.

The principal new measures suggested at the ninth day's session, on which 123 delegates were in attendance, are as follows:

By Mr. Selheimer—To prevent additional compensation being voted to any public officer; that the governor's veto may be overruled by a majority of each house.

By Mr. Samford, of Pike—To allow the state to own works of internal improvements, as steamboats and railroads, but not loan money to same; to prevent abolishment of military features in the University and Polytechnic Institute.

By Mr. Walker, of Madison—To fix the terms of Supreme Court Judges at ten years, one to retire every two years.

By Mr. Cornwell — To limit taxation of cities and towns.

By Mr. Oates—To make the term of governor four years, ineligible to re-election and salary $5,000.

Mr. Long, of Walker, offered a resolution to cancel contract for stenographic report on account of many errors.

Mr. Sanders, of Limestone, introduced a scheme of suffrage reform. It provides an educational qualification, with the Louisiana grandfather clause, and confines office-holding to whites.

The standing committees made no reports.

The convention adjourned until Monday, June 3rd.

Tenth Day.

Important New Rule Adopted—Two More Suffrage Schemes—Courtesy of Floor Extended.

On the call of the roll 106 delegates were found present. A large number of ordinances and resolutions were introduced and referred to committees. The convention refused to remain in session until 2 o'clock. Governor Samford, Congressman Richardson and Hon. Hannis Taylor were extended the courtesies of the floor.

A new rule was adopted by which committees shall report all parts of the present constitution not changed or amended as a part of the new constitution.

The principal new measures proposed were:

By Mr. Pettus—To establish courts of record in each county with power to pass local laws, etc.

By Mr. Heflin—To fix the governor's salary at $5,000.

By Mr. Sollie — To empower the employment of stenographers in circuit courts.

By Mr. Jenkins—Voters must have ability to read and write and pay taxes on $300 worth of property, must have fought in some war or be descended from a soldier and pay a poll tax of $2.25.

By Mr. White—Voters must pay $3.00 poll tax under 45 years of age and $1.50 over, must have fought in some war or be decended from a soldier. After 1910 must read and write and must not have been convicted of a felony, the General Assembly shall have power to preserve the purity of the ballot.

OFFICERS SELECTED.

The university trustees met at Tuscaloosa again on June 3d and selected Mr. J. H. Fitts treasurer and Mr. A. B. McEachin land commissioner of the university. It is now believed that no president will be selected before July.

BANKHEAD PROMOTED.

Henry M. Bankhead, son of Congressman Bankhead, who is a second lieutenant of infantry, will be promoted to a first lieutenancy, the promotion dating from February 2.

TO CONCEAL A CRIME.

King Farmer, white, aged 21, was found dead on the morning of June 1, on the tracks of the Southern railroad, at Anniston. Three bullet holes were found in the body. It is thought he was killed by some unknown party and his body placed on the tracks. The body had been run over and mutilated by a freight train. Deceased was a son of W. E. Farmer, a former prominent citizen of Calhoun county.

ANCIENT BACK TAX CASE.

The suit of State Revenue Agent Wirt Adams against the Tombigbee Cotton Mills, of Columbus, Miss., for back taxes has been settled, the mills having agreed to pay $2,200. The suit has been in the courts a long time and was originally for a sum approximating $30,000. It was won by the mills in the Circuit Court, but the decision was reversed.

BY SEVEN TO FIVE.

The famous land sale of the university was settled on June 1st by the practical adoption of the Smith-Aldrich agreement and the payment to the university by the Sloss-Sheffield company of $5,000, and an additional $8,500 for the surface rights of about 1,000 acres of land which it is said the university does not especially need.

ALABAMA'S EXHIBIT.

Secretary Gibson of the Commercial Club has forwarded the car containing the Alabama exhibit to the Buffalo Exposition. The car contained, among other things, samples of iron and gold ore, limestone, chert, pig iron, steel plates, castings and bars, wire nails, fire brick, coal, coke, cotton seed oil and meal, and fertilizers.

POLK HONORED.

On Monday N. N. Polk, late cashier of the Tennessee, Coal, Iron and Railroad Company was presented a silver purse, filled with gold by the employes of the company, in Alabama and Tennessee. The presentation was made by Dr. R. M. Cunningham in a happy little speech. The gift was a surprise to Mr. Polk, and it was with difficulty that he responded. Mr. Polk, in the capacity of cashier, paid out the first dollar for this corporation.

A FINE TRADE.

United States Senator Beveridge of Indiana is in St. Petersburg, Russia. He expects to see many important personages, and will visit Moscow, the neighboring factory towns, the Volga valley and the iron works in the Ural mining district. Later Senator Beveridge will traverse Siberia. He believes America should and will have a splendid Russian trade.

Jealousy Said to have been the Cause of the Tragedy.

Thursday afternoon about five Dr. John Payne, of Hillman, a suburb of Birmingham, was shot by a telegraph operator, James P. Cook, and mortally wounded, death resulting on the following morning. A 41-calibre Colts pistol was used and the shooting was done from behind, both shots taking effect in the head. After the shooting, Cook came to town and surrendered to the sheriff.

The physician was a very popular young man. Cook had recently separated from his wife, who is said to be a very handsome woman, and the supposition is that jealousy inspired the commission of the murder as it had previously led to the separation.

YOUNGBLOOD RESIGNED.

Col. Wm. Youngblood, of Alabama, Auditor of the Treasury, has resigned and will leave the government service on June 15th. He has accepted a handsome position with the Brotherhood Wine Manufacturing Co., in New York City and will give up his home in Alabama.

$3,000,000 IN IMPROVEMENTS.

The New York Commercial publishes a statement to the effect that the Tennessee Coal Iron & R. R. Company will spend the greater part of the $3,000,000 derived from the sale of bonds in building furnaces in the Birmingham district. The publication states further that the new furnaces were to be built that the additional capacity of the company may be 1800 tons of iron per day.

NEW RAILROAD FOR ALABAMA.

The indications seem favorable for the early construction of the Decatur, Danville and Southwestern railroad. An attorney has been employed to draw up articles of incorporation, deeds for franchise, notice of the opening of the stock books and other necessary blanks, and a citizen of Sumpter county has written that he and his associates will donate twenty-two miles of graded track if the road will pass through their county.

ANOTHER NEW RAILROAD.

The secretary of state has issued an order to open books of subscription for a railway between Montgomery and Anniston, Ala., to be operated by electricity or steam. It will run through a prosperous section of the state, touching the gold mining region.

UNIVERSITY MEETING.

The Board of Trustees of the University met in annual session Thursday afternoon, Colonel Stansell, of Carrollton, presiding on account of the indisposition of Governor Samford. The land matters were fully discussed and the proposed compromise met with opposition. No one has as yet been agreed upon for the office of president.

STORM IN PITTSBURG.

One of the heaviest spring storms known to the government weather bureau passed over Pittsburg Sunday. Much damage was done and four people were badly hurt. The storm lasted only fifteen minutes, but in that time three-tenths of an inch of rain fell, heavy hail ruined many trees and the wind blew down several small houses. At Whittaker, near Homestead, a partly finished store and dwelling were wrecked, burying in the ruins three boys and a man, all of whom were badly hurt. The man may die.

The United States is at present the chosen home of the short story. The English are the better novelists, the Americans the better short-story writers.

The writer of an obituary note in a Kentucky paper warmed up to his work as he proceeded, and closed with this gushing sentence: "She was wafted into the gloom of eternal night at 6 o'clock in the morning."

Anniston Murder May be Explained

The mystery that first surrounded the death of King, the young white man found on the tracks of the Southern railroad has partially lifted and there now have a clue on which to work. Strong suspicion and circumstantial evidence point to a negro living in the city. The officers have been for the suspect but failed to find him. It seems that on the night of the murder Farmer went to the home of a negro. The theory is that he shot and killed Farmer a short distance from the house. In the morning the officers found a large pool of blood and a piece of a shirt, showing that a woman had been in the vicinity. After killing the man it is thought the negro carried the body several hundred yards to the tracks of the Southern railroad and placed it across the rails, hoping that a passing train would mutilate the body beyond recognition. The body was mutilated and bruised, but the identity of the man could not be discerned. The officers are now exerting themselves to catch the negro.

A NEW HOTEL.

Articles of incorporation of the Montgomery Hotel Company were filed in the probate court today. The capital stock of the company is fixed at $250,000 divided into 5,000 shares of $50 each. The books of subscription will be opened at an early date. The charter states that it is the purpose of the company to operate a cafe, barber shops, bath rooms, grill rooms, cafes, newsstands and other modern conveniences. The company is also given the right to lease, hire or sublet carriages, buses, hacks and drays.

FARMER SHOT.

William Turner, a farmer living near Honoraville, was shot by a masked person Saturday night, the balls taking effect in his back but not severely wounding him. He was attracted by an unusual noise in the yard and he and his wife went to the door. It was thought that he was taken to avoid shooting a woman, and so did not kill him. Most of the load was embedded in the door facing. It is not known who the assassin was.

MINISTER DETECTIVE.

Jim Whitecotton, wanted in Jacinta county, Texas, on a charge of murder, was lodged in jail at Birmingham Monday. Whitecotton belongs to a noted family in Jackson county and after killing William [illegible] at Oakhurst, Tex., came back to Jackson county more than a year ago. A reward of $300 was offered for his capture and Will Atkins, a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, living of Huntsville, resolved to earn the reward. He and a companion met Whitecotton in the mountains and tackled him. A pitched battle followed but the fugitive was knocked down and taken without bloodshed.

KILLED BY A BOLT.

Near Salsoda, about six miles west of Luverne, Saturday night's storm was terrible and Toler Pugh, a farmer, was killed by lightning out in the open field, some 200 yards from his house. He had an ax on his shoulder and was instantly killed.

NO STATE ENCAMPMENT.

There is to be no State encampment of the Mississippi National Guard this summer on account of the funds; regimental encampments will take its place. Columbus will make an effort to have the First Regiment go into camp there.

...ILL ARP'S LETTER

...s a Brick at Modern Sensational Preachers.

...'S OLD TIME RELIGION IS THE BEST

...one Nowadays Not Up to Barrow Man's Standard of Reverence.

Bill Has Fine Strawberries.

There seems to be an unusual commotion in the field of religious thought. ...of the three hundred different ...christian creeds and forms of worship one would suppose there were ...ty enough to choose from, but ...e new and startling ones keep ...ing in and the eager craving minds ...the unsettled people are falling ...with the old and falling in with ...new theories and doctrines. There ...no cause for very great alarm in ..., for it proves the natural instinct ...desire to weak and unsettled minds ...some religion that will satisfy ...comfort their longing heart. It ...es the universal belief in God, ...creator and the universal desire ...secure His favor. There is nothing ...w or strange in this. It is history ...repeated. Nine hundred and eighty ...ars ago Alexander Pope, the great ...t and philosopher, wrote

"For modes of faith let graceless zealots fight
He can't be wrong whose life is in the right
Faith and hope the world will disagree
But all mankind's concern is charity."

...Pope was a great and good man and ...el a Christian. His devotion to his ...ther was intense and beautiful. He ...k the tenderest care of her and she ...ed with him until she died, in her ...ety-third year. This is tribute ...ough for any man.

There are many men of many minds. There are some in our day just like ...se of Athens of whom St. Paul ...rote. "Who spent their time in telling or hearing some new thing." Even ...me preachers have a morbid craving ...r sensation and they create a ...mmotion wherever they go. They ...ing to the church militant and believe in thunder and lightning and cyclones and even war as agencies for the propagation of Christianity. The newspapers are crowded with abstruse essays on the new religion both for and against. These distract the skeptical and unsettled minds of many, ...t only for a time. Spiritualism did the same thing for half a century, but happily it has run its course, as the last census shows a large decrease in the number of its followers. But true Christianity moves on serenely amidst all these commotions. Meteors and comets may come and go—even the sun itself may for a brief interval be eclipsed, but, like Christianity, it shines on year after year, century after century, bringing light and life to the world.

Maybe this sensational preaching is needed in these degenerate times, when the spirit of war and the love of money seem to have demoralized the young men of the land, when murder and suicides are of daily occurrence and getting money by gambling in stocks and other short cuts to fortune has become a national sin. But to my mind the old, conservative modes are still the best. I don't like the preacher who ascends the pulpit with a whip in his hand and cracks its lash at every malediction. That would be all right if every man had a pulpit and a whip, so that he could fight back. If I were good enough to be a preacher I would take a text and stick to it reverently and plead with the people in the name of the Lord. Old Dr. Axson of Savannah, was my ideal of a preacher, a man of God whose very presence in the pulpit increased our reverence for it. His texts still linger in the memories of those who listened and carry with them more enduring solemnity. When David pleaded with the Lord for forgiveness and said "Remember not against me the iniquities of my youth," every one prayed with grief and sorrow the many, many errors of his young life. What a grief to every man are the sins of his youth and how earnestly he wishes they could be blotted out from his own memory. I recall another text when David exclaimed in the agony of his heart, "My sin is ever before me." What a subject for an earnest, eloquent divine—the impossibility of erasing from the memory of a sin.

His love of God was his favorite theme, and the helplessness of man in contrast. We know not whence we came nor whither we are going. We cannot add a day nor an hour to our existence. We cannot foresee afflictions nor calamities nor fortify against them. We are utterly helpless and are dependent on the Creator. Then he gave a poetic picture of the wondrous love of the Creator for His creatures and proved it by the adaptation of our senses to the beauties and luxuries of nature—the moon and stars, the mountains, rivers, trees, fruits and flowers, the birds to sing, the flowers to bloom, the earth to bear us food, and how carefully He holds the rolling earth in His mighty hand while we sleep unconscious of any danger and too often forgetful that our Maker is at the helm, watching over us and counting every pulse that beats. "Young man, young man, stop and think!" he exclaimed in tender, tearful pleading.

That is the kind of preaching I like. It is well to have creeds and a faith in them; but creeds are at last the work of men and are controverted and hawked at by those who differ; but when the Lord says, "Do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with thy God," "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God," "Love the Lord with all thy strength and thy neighbor as thyself," and "Love is the fulfilling of the law," there is no need of any better creed. Humility is one of the chiefest cardinal virtues. A man who is vain or conceited is close akin to an idiot. The poet says, "Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud," and the psalmist says, "Lord, what is man that Thou art mindful of him?"

But I didn't start to preach a sermon, although I could preach one if I had a pulpit and a congregation of young people. I was ruminating about these blessings of a kind providence because I had strawberry short cake for dinner and felt grateful. I have a thousand plants that I planted—I, me, myself, no nigger in the woodpile. Last year they did not fruit well and I wrote to Mr. Berckman about it, and he said I must use ashes instead of stable manure. So I scooped out a saucer-like space around every plant and filled it with ashes, and this year they are literally loaded and are of large size and fine quality. As the fellow said of the mosquitoes. They are so large that many of them weigh a pound. By the scale, twenty of them weigh a pound. I am proud of my success, but it does look like a pity that it should take a man seventy-five years to learn how to grow strawberries. Our flowers never were so beautiful, and we have enough for a wedding every week—and I wish they were wanted. My wife actually praises me almost every day, and it takes a good deal to do me and she knows it. I want some when I have worked so hard to please her and the children. I don't want to wait for epitaphs on my tombstone and obituaries in the newspapers. I had rather have some praise right now in words that I can understand. I want some of the flowers placed upon my grave and a rose bush planted near, and they might write on my tombstone:

He was a man of words and deeds,
He kept his garden clean of weeds;
And when the weeds began to grow
He slayed them with his garden hoe.

—Bill Arp, in Atlanta Constitution.

Of the seven expeditions which are to engage in a race to the North Pole the most interesting is that headed by Captain Kampe, who will attempt to realize the fancy of Jules Verne. Captain Kampe is having built a submarine boat which is to be ellipsoid in form, and which is to be capable of holding air enough to last fifteen persons fifteen hours. The motive power will be petroleum, of which 150 tons will be carried. In fifteen hours the craft will be able to travel fifty miles under water, and the adventurer estimates that there is no ice field greater than five miles in width. It is his plan to dive under the ice which surrounds Spitzbergen and steer for the nearest open water in the direction of the Pole. The boat will be able to descend 160 feet, while it is assumed that the ice pack does not extend more than twenty feet below the surface. Captain Kampe is quite as confident of achieving his purpose and returning safely as were Andree and his companions, who sailed away to the north one July day never to come back. Even the sanguine Kampe foresees the possibility of being frozen in under the ice, and to meet such an exigency he will carry powerful explosives to blast a way for his vessel.

According to an estimation by the American Grocer the nation's drink bill amounts to $1,228,674,925, of which $1,059,563,787 is for alcoholic liquids. Official statistics show, it says that prosperity has brought with it an increased demand for spirituous and malt liquors, while the use of non-alcoholic beverages shows a very small gain and in the case of coffee, a decrease. Out of the total sum of $1,228,674,925 about 86 percent is spent for alcoholic stimulants. The cost for non-alcoholic stimulants is as follows: Coffee, $125,798,530; tea, $37,312,608; cocoa, $6,000,000. This added to the $1,059,563,787 spent on alcoholic drinks represents a yearly per capita expenditure for beverages of $16.17 for the 76,304,799 inhabitants of the United States, of a little less than 4 1-2 cents per day. The consumption in 1900 of tea was 416,515,885 gallons, and of spirits and wines 112,675,873 gallons. The statistics prove that coffee and beer are the favorite national beverages and that coffee holds its supremacy over fermented liquors; that the consumption of alcoholic liquor increases in prosperous times and that it was larger in 1900 than for any year since 1893. It is less per capita now than 10 years ago in spite of last year's gain.

ANIMALS' RIGHT TO WARNING.

They Are Entitled to Have the Locomotive Whistle Sounded.

The old dispute as to whether animals can be said to "reason" has been given practical importance by a recent decision of the Iowa Supreme Court. Graybill brought suit against the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway for killing stock at a crossing. It was shown that the engineer had failed to warn the animals by whistling. The railway company contended that the whistle signal required by law was intended only for the protection of human beings. The Court, however, instructed the jury that animals were also entitled to such warning, and a verdict was returned for the plaintiff.

"This provision," said Judge Thornell, in the lower court, "is for the safety of persons and animals near the crossing and about to cross, to warn them of the approach of the train, and to enable them to avoid injury." The railway company excepted to this instruction, and appealed to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court sustained the instruction, and in an opinion by Justice Sherwin held that animals have sufficient reasoning power to enable them to recognize the approach of danger and take measures to avoid it.

The rule of evidence thus established is evidently detrimental to the railways, for it requires them to be as careful in warning animals of the approach of their trains as they have been in warning men. It makes failure to give the statutory warning because no human being now in danger no longer excusable. The Iowa attorney for the railway has filed an elaborate argument for rehearing, in which he denies that animals possess the faculties ascribed to them. He admits that they may be frightened by a locomotive whistle. He denies the possibility of conveying by such means information which the animals can turn to account for their own safety.

No careful observer of the conduct of animals will agree with the railway company's contention. No one honored with the friendship of an intelligent dog doubts that the dog fears punishment, seeks reward, and is sensitive to praise or ridicule. That animals recognize at least proximate causes of pleasant or unpleasant effects seems pretty well established. They know when, though not often why, their masters are pleased or displeased. They learn the consequences to themselves of such pleasure or displeasure. That they learn by experience to avoid danger is unquestioned. That they may be moved by sounds or gestures to recoil from a danger of whose nature they are ignorant is tolerably clear.

There seems to be no reason why animals habitually near a railway may not learn that a locomotive whistle means danger. If they can so learn, they are certainly entitled to the protection given by such information. Until their inability so to learn is established they are at least entitled to the benefit of the doubt. The Iowa Supreme Court's ruling will be approved by every friend of animals. The ground it takes is that toward which science is steadily moving.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Indirect Lightning.

The best disposition of the lights in large public halls is a matter of considerable moment. Many of the modern halls, lobbies, etc., have the lamps concealed in opalescent globes, which diffuse the light and protect the eyes from the glare of the incandescent filaments, electric lamps being almost invariably employed. In the auditorium and drawing rooms of the University of Wisconsin a system of indirect lighting is to be employed. The lamps themselves will be invisible to persons in the rooms. Opaque reflectors will throw the light from the lamps, which are concealed around the room, on to a dead white ceiling. The ceilings will reflect the light uniformly throughout the rooms. Such a method of lighting is absolutely unique, and is not employed elsewhere in America. The authorities of the engineering department of the Wisconsin University feel sure that, despite its novelty, it will prove a decided improvement over existing schemes of interior lighting.

London's Strand is Being Modernized.

Before many years the old Strand will be among the forgotten landmarks of old London. The latest pieces singled out by the building wreckers includes a few shops adjoining Beaufort buildings, a narrow side street leading to the Savoy Theatre, at the rear end of the Hotel Savoy. Between these shops and the Hotel Savoy the work of demolition has already begun by clearing away an acre of ground. This space will largely be used as a courtyard for the hotel, similar to that of the Hotel Cecil, with a wide opening to the Strand, in place of the present narrow entrance.

To overcome the difficulty of the steep grade it is intended to arch over the space between the street and the hotel, which will result in sinking the box office of the theatre almost completely under ground. Access to it will be had by elevators. It is not expected that these improvements will be finished for two years at least.—Chicago Record-Herald.

An Egg Cushion.

Eggs would seem to be the most unsatisfactory material in the world out of which to make cushions, yet such is the fad just now. The contents are blown out of the shells, which when hollow, are strung on wires crossed with ribbons. Each egg is hand-painted, and the whole device is supported on a cushion. Then it is hung on the back of a chair, where, according to fashionable dicta, it is perfectly safe, as truly elegant persons never lean against a chair back, but sit gracefully on the edge of one corner of the seat.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

DISCOURSE BY THE EMINENT DIVINE LAST SUNDAY.

Subject: Estimating Character — The Divine War Differs From the Human War—The American Nation Put Into the Royal Balance.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In this discourse from a symbol of the Bible Dr. Talmage urges the adoption of an unusual mode of estimating character and shows how different is the divine way from the human way; text, Proverbs xvi. 2, "The Lord weighteth the spirits."

The subject of weights and measures as discussed among all nations, is the subject of legislation, and has much to do with the world's prosperity. A system of weights and measures was invented by Phidon, ruler of Argos, about 800 years before Christ. An ounce, a pound, a ton, were different in different lands. Henry III. decided that an ounce should be the weight of 640 dried grains of wheat from the middle of the ear. From the reign of William the Conqueror to Henry VIII. the English pound was the weight of 7680 grains of wheat. Queen Elizabeth decreed that a pound should be 7000 grains of wheat taken from the middle of the ear. The piece of platinum kept at the office of the exchequer in England in an atmosphere of sixty-two degrees F. decides for all Great Britain what a pound must be. Scientific representatives from all lands met in 1889 in Paris and established international standards of weights and measures.

You all know something of avoirdupois weight, of apothecaries' weight, of troy weight. You are familiar with the different kinds of weighing machines, whether a Roman balance, which is our steelyard, or the more usual instrument consisting of a beam supported in the middle, having two basins of equal weight suspended to the extremities. Scales have been invented to weigh substances huge, like mountains, and others delicate enough to weigh infinitesimals. But in all the universe there has only been one balance that could weigh thoughts, emotions, affections, hatreds, ambitions. That balance was fashioned by an Almighty God, and is hung up for perpetual service. "The Lord weighteth the spirits."

The divine weigher puts into the balance the spirit of charity and decides how much of it really exists. It may go for nothing at all. It may be that it says to the unfortunate, "Take this and do not bother me any more." It may be an occasional impulse. It may depend upon the condition of the liver or the style of breakfast partaken of a little while before. It may be called forth by the loveliness of the solicitor. It may be exercised in spirit of rivalry, which practically says, "My neighbor has given so much; therefore I must give as much." It is accidental or occasional or spasmodic. When such a spirit of charity is put into the balance and weighed, God and men and angels look on and say there is nothing of it.

It does not weigh so much as a dram, which is only the one-eighth part of an ounce, or a scruple, which is only the twenty-fourth part of an ounce. A man may give his hundreds and thousands of dollars with such feelings and amid such circumstances, and he will get no heavenly recognition.

But into the divine scales another man's charity is placed. It starts from love of God and man. It is born in heaven. It is a lifelong characteristic. It may have a million dollars or a penury to bestow, but the manner in which that giver bestows it shows that it is a divinely implanted principle.

The one penny given may, considering the limited circumstances, attract as much angelic and heavenly attention as though the check given in charity was so large it staggered the cashier of the bank to cash it. It is not the amount given, but the spirit with which it is given. "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

Perhaps no one but God heard that good man's resolutions, but it amounted about to this: "From this present moment to my last moment on earth, God helping me, I will do all I can to make the world a purer world, a better world, a happier world." But the resolution shines out in his face, sweetens his conversation, enlarges his nature, controls his life and shows itself as plainly in the contribution of $1 as though he had the means to contribute $500,000.

When that charity is put into the royal balance, the heavens watch the weighing and invisible choirs chant from the clouds, and I catch one bar of the music—"Now abideth faith, hope, charity—these three; but the greatest of these is charity."

So also in the celestial scales is placed the spirit of faith. In most cases faith depends on whether or not the sun shines and the man had sound sleep last night, and whether the first person he meets in the morning tells him something agreeable or disagreeable. Some day the sales in his store do not amount to so much as he expected, and he goes home with enough complaints to fill the house as soon as he enters it. Another day the sales are twenty or forty per cent. larger than usual, and as he is putting the key into the door lock his family hear him whistling a tune most jubilant. He has faith that everything in his own affairs and in the affairs of church and state are tending toward better conditions until something depressing happens in his own personal experiences or under his own observation.

But there is another man who by repentance and prayer has put himself into alliance with the Almighty God. Made all right by the Saviour's grace, this man goes to work to make the world straight. He says to himself: "God lauched this world, and He never launched a failure. The Garden of Eden was a useless morass compared with what the whole world will be when it blossoms and leaves and flashes and resounds with its coming glory. God will save it anyhow, with me or without me, but I want to do my share. I have some equipment, not as much as some others, but what I have I will use. I have power to frown, and I will frown upon iniquity. I have power to smile, and I will smile encouragement upon all the struggling. I have a vocabulary not so opulent as the vocabulary of some others, but I have a storehouse of good words, and I mean to scatter them in helpfulness. I will ascribe right motives to others when it is possible. If I can say anything good about others, I will say it. If I can say nothing but evil of them, I will keep my lips shut as tight as the lips of the Sphinx, which for 3000 years has looked off upon the sands of the desert and uttered not one word about the desolation. The scheme of reconstructing this world is too great for me to manage, but I am not expected to boss this job. I have faith to believe that the plan is well laid out and will be well executed. Give me a brick and a trowel, and I will begin now to help build the wall. I am not a soloist, but I can sing 'Rock of Ages' to a sick pauper. I cannot write a great book, but I can pick a cinder out of a child's eye or a splinter from under his thumb nail. I now enlist in this army that is going to take the world for God, and I defy all the evil powers, human and satanic, to discourage me. Count me into the service. I cannot play upon a musical instrument, but I can polish a cornet or string a harp or applaud the orchestra."

All through that man's experience there runs a faith that will keep him cheerful and busy and triumphant. I like the watchword of Cromwell's "Ironsides," the men who feared nothing and dared everything, going into the battle with the shout: "The Lord of hosts is with us. The God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah!" No balance that human brain ever planned or human hand ever constructed is worthy of weighing such a spirit. Gold and precious stones are measured by the carat, which is four grains. The dealer puts the diamond or the pearl on one side of the scales and the carat on the other, and tells you the weight. But we need something more delicately constructed to weigh that wonderful quality of faith which I am glad to know will be recognized and rewarded for all time and all eternity.

The earthly weighman counterpoises on metallic balances the iron, the coal, the articles of human food, the odds of earthly merchandise, but he cannot test or announce the amount of things spiritual.

Put also into those royal scales the ambitious spirit. Every healthy man and woman has ambition. The lack of it is a sure sign of idiocy or immorality. The only question is, What shall be the style of our ambition? To stack up a stupendous fortune, to acquire a resounding name, to sweep everything we can reach into the whirlpool of our own selfishness—that is debasing, ruinous and deathful. If in such a spirit we get what we start for, we only secure gigantic discontent. No man was ever made happy by what he got. It all depends upon the spirit with which we get it and the spirit with which we keep it and the spirit with which we distribute it. Not since the world stood has there been any instance of complete happiness from the amount of accumulation. Give the man of worldly ambition sixty years of brilliant successes. He sought for renown, and the nations speak his name; he sought for affluence, and he is put to his wits' end to find out the best stocks and bonds in which he may make his investments; he is director in enough banks and trustee in enough institutions and president of enough companies to bring on paresis, of which he is now dying. The royal balances are lifted to weigh the ambition which has controlled him a lifetime. What was the worth of that ambition? How much did it yield for usefulness and heaven? Less than a scruple, less than a grain of sand, less than an atom, less than nothing. Have a funeral a mile long with carriages; let the richest robes of ecclesiastics rustle about the casket; caricature the scene by choirs which chant "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." That man's life is a failure, and if his heirs scuffle in the Surrogate's court about the incapacity of the testator to make a last will and testament it will only be a prolongation of the failure. The son, through dissipation, spent his share of the fortune before the father died, and so was cut off with a dollar; the daughter married against his will, and she is disinherited; relatives whom he could never bear the sight of will put in their claim, and after years of litigation so much of the estate as the lawyers have not appropriated to themselves will go into hands which the testator never once thought of when in his last days he bade tearful farewells to the houses and lands and government securities he could not take along with him into the sepulcher.

I do not know the intermediate chapters of the volume of that young man's life, but I know the first chapter and the last chapter. The first chapter is made of high resolve in the strength of God, and the last chapter is filled with the rewards of a noble ambition. As his obsequies pass out to the cemetery the poor will weep because they will lose their best friend.

Many in whose temporal welfare and eternal salvation he bore a part will hear of it in various places and eulogize his memory, and God will say to the ascending spirit, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." In the hour of that soul's release and enthronement there will be heavenly acclamation as in the royal balances "the Lord weigheth the spirits."

But if our character and behavior as a nation are reversed and good morals give place to loose living and God is put away from our hearts, and our schools and our homes and our people and our literature be debauched, and anarchism and atheism have full sway, and our American Sabbath becomes a Parisian Sabbath, and infamous laws get a place on our statute books, and the marriage relation becomes a joke instead of a sanctity, and the God to whom Columbus prayed to on the day of his landing from stormy seas and whom Benjamin Franklin publicly reverenced when he moved, amid derisive cries, the regular opening of the American Congress with prayer, shall in our national future be insulted and blasphemed, then it will not be long before we will need another Edward Gibbon to write the decline and fall of the United States republic, and it will not be another case of destruction by the Goths and Huns and Tartars and Tamerlanes and Attilas or foreign opposition and hate, but it will be a case of world astounding national suicide.

The wish of this sermon is to emphasize the invisible, to show that there are other balances besides those made of brass and platinum and aluminium and set in earthly storehouses; that the spirit is the most important part of us; that the scales which weigh your body are not as important as the scales which weigh your soul. Depend not too much for happiness upon the visible. Pyrrhus was king and had large dominion, but was determined to make war against the Romans, and Cineas, the friend of the king, said to him, "Sir, when you have conquered them what will you do next?" "Then Sicily is near at hand and easy to master." "And what when you have conquered Sicily?" "Then we will pass over to Africa and take Carthage, which cannot long withstand us." "When these are conquered, what will you next attempt?" "Then we will fall in upon Greece and Macedonia and recover what we have lost there." "Well, when all are subdued what fruit do you expect from all your victories?" "Then," said the king, "we will sit down and enjoy ourselves." "Sir," said Cineas, "may we not do it now? Have you not already a kingdom of your own? And he that cannot enjoy himself with a kingdom cannot with the whole world."

I say to you who love the Lord the kingdom is within you. Make more of the invisible conquests; study a peace which the world has no bushel to measure, no steelyards to weigh. As far as possible we should make our balances like to the divine balances.

What a world this will be when it is weighed after its regeneration shall have taken place! Scientists now guess at the number of tons our world weighs, and they put the Apennines and the Sierra Nevadas and Chimborazo and the Himalayas in the scales, but if weighed as to its morals at the present time in the royal balance the heaviest things would be the wars, the international hatreds, the crimes mountain high, the moral disasters that stagger the hemispheres on their way through immensity. But when the gospel has gardenized the earth, as it will yet gardenize it, and the atmosphere shall be universal balm, and the soil shall produce universal harvest and fruitage, and the last cavalry horse shall go unsaddled, and the last gun carriage unwheeled, and the last fortress turned into a museum to show nations in peace what a horrid thing war once was, then the world will be weighed, and as the opposite side of the scales lifts as though it was light as a feather the right side of the scales will come down, weighing more than all else, those tremendous values that St. Peter enumerated—faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity.

God forbid that it should ever be written concerning us as individuals or communities or nations, as it was written on the wall of Belshazzar's banqueting hall the hour when Daniel impeached the monarch and translated the fiery words which blanched the cheeks of the revelers and made them drop their chalices brimming with wine. "Thou art weighed in the balances and fo..nd wanting."

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JUNE 9.

Subject: Jesus Appears to Paul, Acts xxii., 6-16 — Golden Text, Acts xxii., 10 — Memory Verses, 6-8 — Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

6. "As I made my journey." Paul, whose Hebrew name was Saul, was on his way to Damascus, with letters from the high priest granting him authority to arrest the Christians and bring them bound to Jerusalem. "Damascus." The oldest city in the world, situated one hundred and forty miles northeast of Jerusalem. In Paul's time it contained about forty Jewish synagogues, and between 40,000 and 50,000 Jews. At present it is under Turkish rule and has a population of about 150,000, chiefly Mahommedans. "About noon." When the sun was shining so there could be no deception. "A great light." It was "above the brightness of the sun."—Chap. 26: 13. It was in the midst of this glory that Christ was seen by Saul (1 Cor. 15: 8), so that he could enumerate himself among those who had beheld the Lord after His resurrection.

7. "Fell unto the ground." The whole company fell to the earth. Acts 26: 14. "Heard a voice." In the Hebrew tongue. The voice was clear and distinct to Saul, but to those with him it was only a mysterious sound. See on v. 9. "Why persecutest thou Me?" Canst thou give any good reason for it? Must I afresh be crucified by thee? Those who persecute the saints, persecute Christ Himself, and He takes what is done against them as done against Himself.

8. "Who art Thou?" Jesus knew Saul before Saul knew Jesus. "Lord." Used to denote respect for some unknown, august person. "I am Jesus." He takes the name which was the object of Jewish hate. The enmity is against Me and My religion. He whom you persecute is the Lord of life and glory, not simply poor fugitive disciples. It was at this point that Jesus said to him, "It is hard for thee to kick against the goad." Acts 26: 14, R. V.

9. "They heard not the voice." We are told by Luke (Acts 9: 7) that those with him heard the voice. What is meant is clearly that they did not hear the words as words—could attach no meaning to the sounds. We say that a person is not heard, or that we do not hear him, when, though we hear his voice, he speaks so low or indistinctly that we do not understand him.

10. "What shall I do?" Where is now the fury of the oppressor? Convinced that he had in reality persecuted Christ the Lord, and that his religious views and character were wrong, and knowing not what the future held in store for him, he submits himself to the will of Him who had arrested him in his blind career; as though he would entreat Him to be his guide and ruler, with the consent that he would be obedient to all His directions. Being all wrong, he must be entirely changed. Who could work this in him, but Him who saw the utter hopelessness of his case without divine help? "Go." Go into Damascus to be instructed by a disciple whose life and happiness you had hoped to destroy. By this Paul would learn that the disciples had that same forgiving spirit that their Master had. This requirement would test Saul's real sincerity and faith; it also gave him something to do. "Which are appointed." Saul was a chosen vessel unto the Lord (Acts 9: 15), and through him the gospel was to be carried to the Gentiles and to kings, as well as to the children of Israel.

11. "Could not see." He was blind for three days (Acts 9: 9), and during that time was so fully absorbed about his spiritual condition that he neither ate nor drank, but spent the time in fasting and praying. Without doubt this was a season of intense inward conflict, alone and in darkness. Could he give up all his ambitious hopes? Could he leave rank, wealth, honor, friends? Could he enter the service of One so despised, and suffer reproach and danger and death? And all for what? Gradually the conflict ceased, and light dawned into his soul. "The blindness of Saul was no doubt mercifully intended by providence to cause him to attend to the great matter of his soul's salvation."

12. "One Ananias." We know nothing about this man except what we find in this verse and in chapter 9: 10-17.

13. "Came unto me." Ananias had received explicit directions in a vision from the Lord. Saul had also seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in and restoring his sight. "Brother Saul." Knowing to what sacred office the Lord had chosen Saul (verse 15), Ananias felt a respect for him and an interest in his salvation. "Receive thy sight." And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales. This shows that the blindness as well as the cure was supernatural. At this time Saul also received spiritual sight. "Looked up upon him." The verb signifies not merely to look up, but to recover sight; the clause might be translated, I received sight and looked up on him.

14. "Hath chosen thee." "Hath appointed thee." (R. V.) God chose and appointed Saul because Saul had chosen the Lord. Saul might have rejected Christ instead of accepting Him. "Know His will." Was Saul favored above others? No, all who will come to Christ with the whole heart may "know" God's will. "See that Just One." Here is conclusive proof that Jesus actually appeared to Saul. 1 Cor. 9: 1; 15: 8. He heard "a voice from his mouth." (R. V.)

15. "His witness." The preaching of the gospel must be backed up by the experience of the preacher in order to be really effective. God's people are a witnessing people. They are ready to testify in behalf of the One who has saved them. "Unto all men." To the Gentile, to governors and kings.

16. "Baptized." He was baptized by Ananias. "Wash away thy sins." In Luke's account before Saul was baptized Ananias said that the Lord had sent him that Saul might receive his sight and "be filled with the Holy Ghost." The baptism or outward washing could not wash away his sins; the spiritual regeneration and the renewing in the Holy Ghost had already taken place before the baptism. Baptism was a public profession of faith in Christ, and in taking this step Saul proved his sincerity, and the settled conviction he had of the truthfulness of Christianity. "Call on—the Lord." It is the Lord and the Lord only who can save the soul, and every sinner should call mightily on Him for complete deliverance from all sin. We should trust to no outward ordinance for salvation. I desire to emphasize the fact that at this time the Holy Spirit was given to Saul, through the imposition of the hands of Ananias (9: 17), and, thus qualified and prepared for work, Saul immediately entered the synagogues and "proclaimed Jesus" (9: 20, R. V.) as the Messiah, the Son of God.

The Southerner in New York City is one of the most interesting developments of recent American life, yet hardly realized by the country. Gathering force during the last decade, the Southern youth has been going to New York City until a conservative man like Judge Augustus Van Wyck estimates that this element numbers 300,000 within the natural confines of the American metropolis.

SPEAKING of the proposition to reduce the area of the counties in this State, the Edwardsville Standard-News says:

"It means mountains of debt in the building of new court houses and jails; it means more offices and officers, which an already overtaxed people will be called upon to support; it means the disorganization of our county affairs for years, and it means a burden that the people are unprepared and unwilling to assume. It further means incompetent officials in all the smaller counties, because the fees will not justify competent men in accepting the offices. Lastly and sorrowfully, it means that with such a clause in the new constitution its ratification will be jeopardized.

THE Court of County Commissioners unanimously passed the following resolution, which explains itself:

WHEREAS, much of the real estate in Chilton county is assessed below a fair and reasonable value, therefore be it

RESOLVED, by the Commissioner's Court of Chilton county, That this court is of the opinion that no real estate in Chilton county should be assessed at a less valuation than one dollar per acre, and the Tax Assessor is hereby instructed not to assess any real estate at a lower valuation than one dollar per acre, and to exercise great care and diligence in seeing that all real estate is assessad at its proper valuation, and when he is satisfied that land is worth two, three, four, five or more dollars per acre he is hereby instructed to assess it accordingly.

TRESPASS NOTICE.

All persons are hereby forbidden fishing and trespassing on the lands owned by the undersigned, generally known as the Maddox's mill place, under penalty of the law.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

There is little of special importance in the convention proceedings this week, and the details will be found in another place in this issue.

On Wednesday the convention listened to the reading of an address from the negroes of the State, and on Thursday Mr. Pettus, of Limestone, introduced a resolution providing that no negro, black man, or person or African descent shall be allowed to vote in any Federal, State, county or municipal election.

Friday Gov. Oates introduced a resolution to increase the governor's salary to $5,000 per annum, that he be elected for four years and be ineligible to succeed himself. The convention adjourned until Monday.

Monday only 106 members pres- Mr. Pettus introduced an ordinance giving power to courts of county commissioners to legislate for their respective counties. Tuesday more ordinances introduced, but none of the committees have yet reported.

The following resolutions have been introduced by Mr. Reynolds:

Be it resolved by the people of Alabama in convention assembled that: All county officers within this State shall be elected for a term of four years and that they be ineligible to any office in the county within four years after the expiration of their term of office.

Be it resolved by the people of Alabama in convention assembled that: A stock law shall not be passed for any community within this State until such question shall have been submitted, in an election for that purpose alone, to the people of that community and a majority of the qualified voters shall have, at said election, approved the passage of such stock law.

Be it resolved by the people of Alabama in convention assembled that: No person shall be permitted to marry within five years after obtaining a divorce.

DELTA.

New Salem.

Farmers in this section are very busy with their crops.

There is several of our girls who have heart disease and no sure cure.

Messrs. Tom and Cleveland Lowe of Jemison paid a flying visit to this place Sunday; welcome again, boys.

Mr. T. says that a boy loses confidence in a girl when she says he has told a falsehood.

I wish our neighbors would express themselves more plainly and not use so many hints. Some of the people we compared with an egg last week are now running over.

We hope that our children's day, which will be on Saturday before the third Sunday in this month, will be a success; come one, come all; come and bring your baskets. Some say they will not come, their absence will be good company. I don't guess anyone will lose very much sleep over it, or or least Suse will not.

Mr. Tilton is wearing a broad frown on his face; we are wondering what is the cause of such a change.

We have some very free-hearted brothers and sisters in giving advice, but when it comes to taking dinner to a public gathering they are not so free as you heard they were.

SUSE.

TO SCHOOL OFFICERS AND OTHERS INTERESTED:

Clanton, Ala., June 3, 1901

I desire to call your attention to an Act passed at the last session of the General Assembly of Alabama, which provides for an uniform series of Text Books to be adopted for Chilton county.

No. 1130, section 1 of the Act, makes it the duty of the county superintendent to appoint four citizens, two of whom shall be teachers. These four men, together with the county superintendent as chairman of the board, to be known as "The Text Book Board of the Public Schools of Chilton county." In obedience to this duty I appointed Profs. R. A. Rasco, G. L. Speer, J. M. Collier and Judson Strock members of this board.

On May 27th we met and adopted the text books, which were published in last week's Banner, also the prices, rate of exchange and length of exchange were given. The committee used its very best judgment in selecting the books, taking into consideration the subject matter, binding, price and adaptability of the books to the conditions of the schools. This was done with the desire on the part of the committee to give to the children of the county such books as would be most beneficial to them for the short term schools, and at the same time hold up the standard of education in the county.

I trust the teachers and school patrons will make earnest efforts to supply their schools with the books adopted as early as consistency will permit, as no school can be paid any of the public school funds unless it uses the books adopted by the committee. I feel sure this is a step in the right direction, and no doubt will prove just as satisfactory to the people of Chilton county as it has in many other counties, and even States, where uniformity of text books has been tried.

It will be well, no doubt, in this connection, to notify trustees that they must take the census of the children in their townships and school districts this year. For this purpose I sent blanks to all the trustees some time ago. This consolidated report that you send in to me must reach me before the first day of August, or your township or district will fail to be represented in the new census and appropriation next year. This consolidated report must be sworn to before you send it to me.

I have just received some circulars from the State Superintendent which I shall mail to trustees at an early date. Thanking the trustees and teachers for their prompt and hearty co-operation with me in what ever effort I have made in trying to improve our common schools, and confidently believing they will continue to do so when efforts are made in the right direction, I shall ever be found ready to serve you to the best of my ability when you call on me. Very truly,

J. W. MOORE, Co. Supt.

FLORENCE, S. C., Nov. 26, 1900.

I was first advised by our family physician in Charleston to use TEETHINA with our baby when she was but a very young infant, as a preventive of colic and to warm and sweeten the stomach. Later it was useful in teething troubles, and its effect has been found to be so very beneficial and so free from the dangers that are consequent upon the use of drugs and soothing syrups, that we have come to regard it, after use with three children, as one of the necessities when there is a new baby in the house and until the teething troubles are over, and we take pleasure in recommending it to our friends instead of the horrid stuff that so many people use to keep their babies quiet. All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucuous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. AGRICULTURAL.

When to Sow Onion Seed.

Onion seed may be sown in the hot bed and forced, the small bulbs to be transplanted later. Sow the seed thickly in rows. Onion sets can be procured of seedsmen and may be put out now. They are better for garden use than to attempt to grow onions from seed.

Soft-Shelled Eggs.

It is generally supposed that soft-shelled eggs are the direct result of the overfat condition of the hens, but I am inclined to think the trouble more often arises from a lack of shell forming material than from any other cause. Hens that are at liberty to roam over unlimited territory never lay soft-shelled eggs, and this no doubt is due to the fact that they find enough of various things which nature in her generous mood has provided to supply the egg shell material required, but not so with those hens which are confined in lots of limited range.

A test of this was made with two dozen hens, fed on table scraps and whole oats. Nothing was furnished in the way of special shell forming food expect grit, which was kept constantly at hand. After six weeks several of the hens began to lay soft-shelled eggs, although they were rather thin in flesh. A box of oyster shells was then provided for them, and within a week not a soft shell egg could be found.

This is only one of the many tests along this line, and I am thoroughly convinced that overfat hens do not lay at all, and thin hens lay soft-shelled eggs only when they do not get the necessary shell-forming material. If the hens run at large they will gather what they need; if confined, human hands must provide it.—Home and Farm.

Anchor Posts For a Wire Fence.

The success of a wire fence depends largely on the corner or anchor posts. I have found the following plan the best of all the kinds I have seen. Set a common heavy post pretty deep in the ground at the corner. Another eight or ten feet in line of the fence. Fit a stout piece between them at the top; a four by four scantling is good. Then take a cable made by three or four strands of wire, about No. 9. Fasten it firmly to top of second post. Tie it around a log three feet long, or a good sized stone, buried two and a half feet deep, about five or six feet back from the corner post, cutting a trench for cable so it will enter the ground by the corner post. Now fill the hole and trench and stamp earth well around anchor log or stone and you will have a corner post you can tie to.—Lewis S. Alter, in Farb, Field and Fireside.

The Cultivation of Roses.

The rose is a general favorite, and every one should cultivate it as extensively as possible. If your space is small and you must economize ground, plant roses in a circle. Six can be planted in a circle four feet in diameter, with one in the centre, giving you seven bushes in a small space. They can be planted so as to form a rose hedge or in some unused part of the back yard. Nothing is more pleasing than the old pink roses that used to grow at the childhood's home. Plant three feet apart near a fence, and you will have a rose hedge. A wild rose makes a pretty rambler and can be trained to any porch or building. Keep all sod or grass from the bushes for a distance of a foot or more. Keep the soil well cultivated. Use coal ashes to the depth of six inches around the plants in the winter after the ground is frozen. If a tender variety, wrap straw matting around the bushes so as to protect them from the winter blast. If they are in a hedge make a narrow box, with side pieces three inches apart, fit over them, fill with dry leaves and you have a warm house for your favorites.

As to pruning, every one has his own methods. I prune as soon as the frost is gone from the ground and I prune close. I find where we do this we have more flower twigs than if more is left on. Snip all dead and blighted buds and also the "apple" as soon as the petals begin to fall. Carefully guard the bushes from the ravages of the aphida, and spray at least once a week with tobacco water as a preventative. With a little care we can have roses from June to October.—Mrs. J. W. Bates, in The Epitomist.

Tests For Adulterated Paris Green.

As many articles of use are adulterated, Paris green is no exception. When pure, Paris green should contain 58.65 per cent. of arsenious oxide, 31.29 per cent. of copper oxide, and 10.06 per cent. of acetic acid. The pure article will vary but little from these proportions. The main substance of value in Paris green is the arsenious oxide, which, according to the above, composes nearly six-tenths of Paris green. London purple varies in composition, hence samples are unreliable. It is a waste product in the manufacture of aniline dyes. There are two tests for Paris green. It is insoluble in water, but dissolves in ammonia. Shaken in a bottle of ammonia it produces a blue liquid. It will dissolve completely if enough ammonia is used, and after standing awhile if it is found that portions have settled to the bottom of the bottle, or other vessel used, the solid matter found to have settled will be adulterants of some kind. This test is not conclusive, however, as some of the adulterants may be soluble, but if any solid matter is noticed to have settled when using ammonia it should afford ground for suspicion. The test may be made with a vial or test-tube, if preferred. Another sample of the Paris green, (about as much as will rest upon the point of a penknife), should be placed upon a piece of perfectly dry glass. Hold the glass at an angle, jar it slightly at the edge, and the Paris green in moving down the inclined surface, will leave a deep green streak. If impure the streak may be white or a pale green. The two experiments may be conducted at the same time for comparison of results. These tests, as stated, are not conclusive, but will be of assistance to those who cannot employ a chemist to make a complete analysis.—Philadelphia Record.

A School of Princesses.

There is one school in the world where all the pupils are princesses. It is at Bangkok, and the scholars are members of the royal family of Siam. They come to school on Monday mornings and go to their respective palace homes on Friday, just as less aristocratic scholars might.

The principal of the school is an Englishwoman, and the curriculum is of the simplest order, as required by the court. Reading, writing and music are the only branches taught, the remainder of the time being devoted to domestic teaching. The little princesses learn laundry work in all its processes, cooking and every other department of housekeeping, and enjoy it immensely, the teachers say. Each pupil in turn cooks the meals for the school, prepares the table, arranges the flowers and writes the menu in the proper European manner.

Each princess has two or three maids to dress and attend her, yet delights in the bedmaking, laundry work and other details so often thought obnoxious by young persons of lower degree.

An Adventure in Domestic Economy.

"I see," said the head of the firm, "that you have an article in one of the magazines this month."

"Yes," the young man proudly replied. "I think I have demonstrated in a thoroughly reasonable way the practicability of living on $4 a week."

"I congratulate you," his employer answered. "It's a good article. I read it with great interest. And, by the way, I've been troubled a good deal lately. I've felt that it must be mighty hard for you to get along on what I was paying you, and I've been wondering how I could work things around so as to give you more without increasing the running expenses of the concern."

"Yes?" the young expert returned, with a hopeful inflection.

"But it's all right, I see," the old gentleman answered. "You can live on $4 a week and that leaves you $6 to have fun with or to save, as you please. So there's a load off my mind. Say, if you write any more articles along this line tell me about them, will you? I'd like to read 'em. It's great stuff."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Dangerous Mattresses.

When the Health Department of the large cities are searching for the unsanitary it would be well to look into the methods of the cheap mattress-makers. An excelsior mattress, which is the cheapest thing on the market to-day, has usually an outer layer of shoddy, an dthis shoddy is about the worst possible material that can be found, produced by a ragpicking machine which grinds up the filthiest rags that the dirtiest ragpickers may gather. Imagine its character when it is sold for one and a half cents a pound. These rags possess the disease germs of nearly every complaint that can be found in our large cities. To be sure, in the manufacture of other fabrics a great deal of shoddy is used, but it is thoroughly dyed and disinfected, but the stuff used in many of the cheap mattresses is invariably in its natural and most virulent state and a crying menace to life. It is the opinion of a man closely identified with this trade that it is a subject for the health authorities to investigate.—New York Upholsterer.

What the Children Cost.

"Do you suppose I'm worth it?" a bright girl exclaimed, as she handed me a neatly bound account book. "From June 10, 1880," it is said on the cover. Opening to the first page I found a list of expenses, including such articles as rubber rings, patent food, etc. "That is a record of every cent that has been spent for yours truly since the date of her birth," she explained. "Mamma started the books for both Fred and me and kept them till we were sixteen, then she made us do it. You see," turning the leaves, "she put down everything, even to our baby photographs, and it's been a wholesome revelation for us to count up the totals once in a while. It tells the story of a boy's and girl's expenses to compare. There was a time when it was about even, and I remember how glad I was that Fred had to have his teeth filled first. I wouldn't part with my expense book for anything and I wonder more mothers don't start them for their children."—Good Housekeeping.

Children Should Be Taught to Be Thrifty.

A savings bank account is a great incentive to thrift in children. If one is begun for the baby, even with a very small sum, and added to through childhood and youth with a certain proportion of the money that otherwise would be spent carelessly and thoughtlessly by the child, there will be a very respectable amount on the credit side of the ledger when the depositor is 18 years old. The habit of self-denial is not the least of the substantial benefits that follow a wise economy of money.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Mrs. Gould Likes Antiques.

Mrs. Edwin Gould is as fond of bric-a-brac and antiques as her world-famed relative, the Count de Castellane. She indicated her tastes in this regard on the occasion of a recent visit to New Orleans during the mardi gras festivities.

New Orleans is the mecca for rich southerners who are on the outlook for old-time furniture. The French people have many valuable articles dating back to the pre-Napoleon period, and with proper patience some rare pieces can be got in the old creole town.

It did not take long for Mrs. Gould to appreciate this opportunity, and she spent much of her time shopping.

These articles were ordered to be shipped to Jekyl island, on the coast of Georgia, where Mrs. Edwin Gould has a cottage. The furnishings will suit the Jekyl island atmosphere which hovers over the crumbling mansions of the Georgia colonial aristocracy.

Flattery from the Mirror.

Does your mirror do you justice? You may think not. Or perhaps you would like it to flatter you just a little. If so, you can arrange it so the glass will reflect in a more complimentary manner than usual. If you do, you only have to know the milliner's oldest secret, and the thing is done.

Did you ever notice the softest drapery of pure white hung about a mirror? That is the trick. After your mirror of faultless glass is thoroughly polished, frame it in pure white gauze, with the material gathered in the centre at the top and falling wavelike on either side. Then notice the effect. The true tints of he complexion will be there—a little emphasized. The expression of the countenance, the light of the eye, the color of the hair will be accurately reflected, all softened and made more harmonious than your mirror showed them before the gauze was used. You may believe that that subtle bit of white material makes the glass tell nearer the truth than it did without it.—New York Herald.

Chinese Women.

It is strange, says Harper's Weekly, that in a country where the ties of family are so strong and where so much attention is given to the preservation of the family name, women should be so looked down upon as they are in China. The reason for this, however, is to be found in the system of ancestral worship and the patriarchal gathering together of families. From the time of her bethrothal a Chinese girl belongs to the family of her prospective husband, and often when her own family is poor or feels unable to afford keeping her until she reaches a marriagable age she is sent even while a mere child to her husband's family to be raised by them. Even when she stays at home she worships not the tablets of her own ancestors, but those of her husband's; so she is useless to the family into which she is born, so far as the observance of the ancestral rites is concerned.

This is the reason why a Chinaman, on being asked the number of his children, answers only with the number of his sons and never counts in his girls. This, too, is the reason why, as a rule, Chinese girls are not educated. Since she is to belong to another family, the parents do not bother about her.

First Women Physicians.

Russia has long prided herself on having the first women physicians. Marya Bokoff, Nadezhda Susloff and others were pioneers, not only in their own studies, but also in opening up medical instruction to their countrywomen. The career of Nadezhda Susloff, one of the earliest and best women doctors, is particularly interesting. Born a serf, and freed with her parents, at the emancipation in 1861, she and her brothers and sisters received the best possible education at home and abroad, for her parents were both extremely intelligent, and her father acquired wealth after gaining his freedom. Everywhere, in Russia and in the continental schools, Nadezhda was brilliantly successful.

For 30 years there has been no manner of doubt as to the sympathy of the public and the medical world with the idea of thorough medical instruction for women. Men started the movement. In 1870 one professor and two other men undertook to establish courses for instructing women in midwifery, two graded nurses being provided. Mme. Dodsavenny, now Mme. Shasvawsky, gave 50,000 rubles for higher medical courses, and the minister of war arranged to have them opened in connection with the military medical academy, in 1872. They gave full instruction, in contrast with the initial experiment where the course was partial because it was felt that a woman should not be allowed to deal with one vitality important branch of practise unless she were very thoroughly equipped. These higher courses lasted for 10 years, and during that period had 959 students, the majority coming from the "Privileged classes," that is to say, not peasants. In 1877 24 students were sent to the seat of war, during the Russo-Turkish campaign, and did so well that they received imperial permission to call themselves (after due examination) "women physicians," and to wear a badge.—The Chautauquan.

Hungry Women in Hospitals.

It is a curious thing that hospital nurses should be ill fed, but they often are, and in many institutions. This is not intended for an accusation, but merely an inquiry into a state of things which many people who know about the workings of hospitals, most especially nurses in training, will echo, asking, Why? Possibly the reason that insufficient and unhygienic food is too often the rule may be looked for in the fact that formerly sisters looking for hardships were the only ones who gave themselves over to these tasks of mercy.

Fasting was part of the business of women who nursed the sick in the old days, and possibly the notion unconsciously that fasting is a good thing for women who bend over beds of pain. Whittier expressed this notion in the poem of the "Angels of Buena Vista," the "noble Mexican women" went about on the field of battle after the fight, "worn and faint and lacking food."

It is poetic, romantic, in the old-fashioned way, but it is not a bit modern, sustaining or comfortable. A hungry woman as an angel of mercy is not considered a scientific, or even a practicable, adjunct of a modern battlefield. When the Cuban war began the surgeon-general of the army warned the untrained horde of women, moved by sentiment or emotion, who wanted to go to Cuba as nurses to stay away. Only Clara Barton's modern sort of angels of mercy who knew enough to keep themselves nourished on short but wholesome rations without making a fuss about it were allowed service, and these were in the disciplinary service of the Red Cross. System is the very open secret of the success of that organization; hospitals in times of peace and in cities are of course run on system also, but it is a system that lacks organization on the food question.

It is really queer that nurses in training, of all people, should not be fully and properly nourished, if for no other reason than to give them object lessons in hygienics. To be hungary all of the time that she finds herself obliged to recruit her forces by pieces of food left upon the patients' trays of extra-nourishing viands is not good discipline, physical or mental, for the girls of today who are studying in hospitals are of the most useful of the modern professions for women.—New York Mail and Express.

FOR WOMAN'S BENEFIT

Most of the linen frocks have gored skirts with shaped flounces.

There is a chemisette of tucked white batiste.

Equestrienne and automobile gloves come with deep, stiff gauntlets.

The newest foulards are those with borders, and they are very charming.

There is a yellow linen frock which is trimmed with narrow white silk bands.

Some of the early models for linen gowns show that there will be a profusion of small pearl buttons used in trimming.

A pretty effect in foulard gowns is given in an attractive silk with a black lace trimmings. The result is excellent. There is a bit of blue at the neck to give a light touch to the gown.

A beautiful tea gown of pink crepe de chine is a mass of plaits from the yoke or guimpe over which falls a deep collar of embroidered silk to the foot of the gown, where there is a ruffle of graduated width in the silk also embroidered.

Turquoise blue and green make a more charming combination than would be imagined. A shirred tulle hat of the mushroom variety is raised off the face by soft choux of white flambeau silk, while the edge of the hat is out lined with a wreath of dainty green leaves.

A most stylish tea gown is of dotted black silk muslin, the dots half the size of a penny and set at wide intervals. There is a bolero of black lace with stock and a guimpe effect of stripes made with insertions of lace. The sleeves to this very stylish gown reach to the wrist. The whole thing is made over white silk.

In Paris they are making lace roses. But why? The exquisite silk and velvet flowers shown now are the nearest approach to the beauties of nature that one could expect. Also in Paris they are making hats with black velvet brims and loose, puffy crowns of colored tulle. Around the crown is a velvet band, terminating in a good sized bow.

From the happy earth's completeness,
From the perfumed showers of summer
And the spicy south winds sweetness.

Weaving charms with dewy plunder,
And we're chemists of the sunshine
Changing form and working wonder.

Though folk may thank us blossoms,
They'll find we're really apples."

Wild Animals and Catnip.

A curious investigator and a few sprigs of catnip led to an amusing scene at the Zoo in Central Park, New York City, recently.

The tigers and the puma scornfully refused to notice the herb when it was presented to them by the keeper, but the lion, the lionesses, and the big leopard were boisterous in their manifestations of pleasure.

The lion planted a foot upon it, smelled it, licked it, sprawled upon it, and tossed it about in ways unbecoming his kingly dignity. The leopard picked it up in her huge paw, took long and ecstatic sniffs, and rolled over and over upon it in the exuberance of her delight. In her efforts to apply it to the upper part of her head, she performed acrobatic feats of an astonishing kind.

From this experiment the investigator was satisfied that love of catnip is not confined to the domestic branch of the cat family.

The Mystery of Sound.

Sound is one of the simplest things in the world, and yet to many persons, young and old, it is one of the most mysterious. Tell them, for example, that the fall of a tree in a forest makes no sound in itself, and they smile incredulously; or, if they believe you, they confess that they cannot understand it. When you say that the presence of some person or some thing with ears is absolutely essential to the production of sound they seem unable to grasp the idea, and contend that the fall of the tree does make, and cannot help making, a noise, which is there, all the same, whether there be anybody to hear it or not.

But they are wrong, of course, for there is no sound except in the ear. In the making of a sound there are three essential conditions. Let us take this illustration of the tree in the forest. It falls and strikes the ground. That is the first condition. Its striking the ground sets the air around it into violent agitation. That is the second condition; but there is no sound yet, only a series of vibrations through the air, spreading out in every direction from the fallen tree. These vibrations, it must be remembered, are not sound. They are only the factors that produce it, and they cannot produce it until the third condition is supplied, which is the tympanium, or drum, of somebody's ear, against which they strike, and thus makes a sound.

Sound, therefore, is nothing but the striking of air vibrations against the drum of the ear; it exists only in the ear, and cannot exist out of it. The conditions that produce it exist out of the ear, but the ear is absolutely necessary to complete it.

A City in Which There Are No Horses.

What American boy or girl ever saw a city that did not have more horses in it than one would like to count? Horses of all kinds and sizes, from the pretty little Shetland pony, the pride of his young owner's heart, up to the strong, heavy horses that pull the great rumbling loaded down wagons through the streets of the busy city.

Why, there are so many horses no one thinks anything about them. You cannot walk down the street or even look out of your window without seeing some of them. But there is a city in far-away Italy, across the wide Atlantic, where there is only one horse, and this horse is considered such a curiosity that it is kept in the public gardens. People there visit the gardens to see this horse just as you, perhaps, visit the zoo in Lincoln Park to see the lions and bears.

But how do the people in this city get along without any horses? Well, the city is Venice, and, as you no doubt know, this city is a very wonderful one in some respects, for it is built upon many small islands, and its streets are the canals between the islands. Water here takes the place of streets of earth and stone, and boats take the place of horses. How funny it would seem to go to school in a gondola, as they call their boats there!

Venice seems like fairyland at night, when the principal streets or canals are lighted up and the dancing waters reflect the many colored lights of the pretty gondolas that dart over the waters. Some of the buildings are tall and beautiful, and as you look at them from a distance they seem to rise right out of the water. If you ever go to Venice be sure to call to see its one and only horse, for that is a noted personage there, and one not to be slighted. And you may be allowed to ride around on its back, as children in New York City and Chicago ride on the backs of the elephants and camels in the parks.—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Sag End.

"Just one more story," begged Beth, "something about you were in Alaska."

Uncle Frank deliberately consulted his watch.

"I—I'm afraid it's time you know was in bed," he stammered mischievously into Beth's eyes. "And a bed more than one I slept in last night," he added.

Beth knew by the twinkle in his eye that he was going to be interesting, if it was.

"Was it one that hung on the wall, like the one grandpa was in?" she curiously.

"No, 'twas one like a sack and it buttoned up."

Beth looked in astonishment of a "buttoned up" bed.

"Yes," continued Uncle Frank, amused at Beth's astonishment, "'Twas made of canvas, lined with very warm wool, a flap that contained an opening in it. Tain't like your bed, ever we wanted to crawl in feet first. You button it up, and it keeps you warm morning. And I guess it looked like a log than anything else, queer, round bed."

"My! I'd like to have seen it in," exclaimed Beth.

"Well, you'd need your ears on a snow-covered mountain when the wind blew a gale for the time. A tent would have been a blast for a moment, but in the beds one was safe and snug as a bug in 10 minutes."

And Beth ran upstairs to dream the queer little beds in the Alaska mountains.—The Register.

Furry with Wings.

It was a troublesome question, wonder it proved to be, but the cat's little mind to settle. The mind was only about as big as a little doubled-up fist. It was covered over with pretty silky hair, but there were two big pointed things sticking up on top.

This was the question: Is good and clever to catch things with four legs and not catch little feathery things with legs? If here were four legs it was patted and praised and called nice kitty and a good mouser, sometimes times they gave her milk in a saucer. In a desert, after she had eaten a four-legged thing.

But, if there were only two legs was all very different. She followed to eat it at all. Then away from her and hid it. showed it to a certain person her ears boxed, too. Some smallest person cried, and sons scolded and called cruel cat to catch the poor

Now what was it that made difference between the two legs and the things One kind—the furry kind—round ears, to be sure, and the other kind—the feathery had big wings. The furry nice long wriggly tail, while every one's tail was flat and not good to eat. But both tasted very nice, and both to catch.

Pussycat thought upon the tions a great deal, especially ever the persons boxed her she never succeeded in understanding it. Still, as the family such a disagreeable fuss learned to be very particular proceedings.

Whenever she caught a four-footed furry kind she up on the veranda and ate of it, curling her long tail and step-stepping with her But if it had but two feathery, she carried it hedge, out of sight, and quickly as she could.

Somehow the family found this practice of Pussycat's when Pussycat came in a a thing in her mouth, out on the veranda to see what she would do. cat started up the path slower and slower and short. Then she turned toward the hedge and started to go that way again.

Then she laid the thing the ground, and stood at it. She was thinking wondering whether she risk losing the pleasure her prize or risk being taken away from her. worst puzzle Pussycat ever

She started first one way, other way, several times came on toward the veranda slowly and all ready to slip a flash, should she find a mistake. When she down on the top step, just what the trouble was they all laughed at poor

No wonder poor Pussycat puzzle! It was a furry must be right to catch wings, also, so probably it to catch it. When she the matter by counting found it hadn't any legs

It was a hat. And a fur like a mouse; but it The family laughed at poor Pussycat. And then the son took her up and carried to the kitchen and gave saucer of milk, because but couldn't be good to eat

But Pussycat ate both the hat.—Edith Francis, Little Folks.

Something to Be Thankful.

Bill—When a dog wags its tail it a sign of?

Jill—Why, it's a sign that "Glad of what?" "Glad the tail to wag."—Yonkers

TERRIFIC STORMS

Passed Over the Southern States on the Last Day of May.

And at a number of points considerable damage was done. The storm struck the northern portion of Tarrant, Ala., completely destroying a large amount of valuable property. Roofs were blown off and smoke stacks were down, but no one is known to have received any serious injury. The large Odd Fellows' hall was left a mass of ruins. Several fine mules were killed by lightning. Crops are greatly damaged and the fruit crop is badly injured. At Herod, one store was demolished and two mules killed. Three houses were destroyed at Belcher, and several houses were unroofed at Parrott. About thirty houses were destroyed in and near Dawson, telephonic and telegraphic communication being cut off.

At Vicksburg, Miss., a windstorm, almost cyclonic in proportions, struck uprooting trees, houses and everything else in its path. So far only one fatality is reported, a 5-year-old child. The wind was accompanied by heavy hail and the damage to crops will be heavy. The rain fall was nearly four inches.

A heavy rain and hail storm covered a wide area in Texas, and great damage has been done to all crops, especially to fruit, eastern Texas having been affected to a greater extent than any other portion. A special from Longview says hail was twenty inches deep in places and much damage was done, and one from Palestine says the damage to portions inside the city and to crops in the surrounding country will reach $150,000.

A rain and electric storm passed over Roma. Information received from the vicinity of Summerfield and north of that place is to the effect that no little damage was done to oats and corn.

DOWN STEEP GRADE.

One Killed Outright, One Will Die, Twenty-five Injured.

Three heavily loaded cars on the People's Street Railway ran away while going down a steep hill in Wilmington, Del., Friday, killing one man, fatally injuring another and hurting twenty-five more or less seriously. One man jumped from a window and was cut in two. One conductor stuck to his post and his legs and one arm were broken and internal injuries inflicted. His death is expected. Each car carried nearly 100 passengers. The line is a new one and the motormen were not familiar with the heavy grade.

BUTTE SLIDING.

The strange sliding movement of the city of Butte, Montana, which has been noticeable at intervals for several years, has again manifested itself by five large cracks in the earth in different sections of the city. The largest crevice is a crack twelve inches wide and of considerable length and depth. There is no caving, but a distinct paving of the earth and the granite walls can easily be seen in them. The gas and water companies have much trouble on account of the strange movement which frequently breaks their underground pipes. The continuance of the strange phenomena is beginning to cause some alarm among the citizens of Butte.

TEXAS TOWN BURNED.

Jasper, Texas, county seat of Jasper county, was entirely destroyed by fire Sunday morning. Previous to the fire the postoffice and county treasurer's safes had been blown open and robbed. The conclusion is that robbers blew open these safes and set fire to the town to cover up their crime. The loss is estimated at $100,000 by the fire and it is not yet known what the thieves secured. As far as can be learned there were no lives lost and no one hurt. The robbers escaped.

Elephants Once Roamed in England.

While excavating for the foundations for the new buildings of the Victoria and Albert museums in South Kensington a carload of fossilized bones was brought to the surface by the workmen. These were taken in charge by Dr. Woodward of the geological department, who pronounced them the remains of the primitive denizens of the soil that lived there before man came to interfere with them. The bones belonged, he said, to a London newspaper representative, to the elephant the stag and the primeval horse, and date back to a time before Great Britain became isolated, ere yet the Straits of Dover had been cut through. The excavators at South Kensington also unearthed a fine specimen of the sarsenstone, weighing 1,300 pounds, which must have been transported hither by ice floes in preglacial times.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Another Old Goose.

A goose on the farm of Mr. Watkins Olifach Maen, South Wales, reached the extraordinary age of forty-one years last spring. Up to ten years ago this goose laid regularly, and has hatched and brought up hundreds of goslings. For some time now she has not mixed with or taken any notice of the other geese and the solitary journey of the poor old thing toward the end of its long and useful life is pathetic to behold, although she is treated with every kindness by her kind-hearted owner.

The 3-year-old son of a flat dweller, who had heard his father complain occasionally because the janitor was drunk and "in no condition to attend to his work," went to the flat above his own last week and rang the bell. When Mrs. Blank answered it, the young man said:

"Please, Mrs. Blank, can't your little girl come down and play with me?"

"Not today," said Mrs. Blank; "she is in no condition to play."

"What's the matter?" asked the boy anxiously. "Is she drunk?"—New York Sun.

MAN ON THE CORNER

The Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

Glorious Fourth is to be celebrated in fine style at Clanton [illegible], and I understand that [illegible] proposes to let us have [illegible] show this time, which is [illegible] action on their part. Last celebration was such a big [illegible] that it has put our folks on [illegible] and they have started [illegible] determination that this [illegible] to eclipse all previous efforts. About one hundred dollars [illegible] collected in a short time on [illegible] which was [illegible]. Now for a long and [illegible] together and we [illegible] Fourth that's worth [illegible] coming to.

[illegible] is to be held at the [illegible] to-night (Wednesday) [illegible] some action in regard to [illegible] establishment of a bank here, [illegible] hope it will go through all [illegible] Mr. Batson, the Rockford [illegible] is here and will aid and [illegible] the movement, providing [illegible] people are willing to join [illegible] need a good substantial [illegible], and it is to every one's [illegible] to do all in their power to [illegible] started on a firm foundation.

[illegible] delighted to learn there is a [illegible] on foot, with good prospects being carried to a successful termination, for the erection of a cotton factory at Clanton. Clanton is making great [illegible] forward, the establishment of a cotton factory would give an [illegible] to our trade that nothing else could. It would improve our trade vastly, and would become market for a considerable amount of farm produce. A factory and must have [illegible] a good thing, push it [illegible]

[illegible] been asked for my opinion [illegible] as a feed, and have made [illegible] queries on the subject. I [illegible] those who use it declare [illegible] food for mules and [illegible] particularly good for [illegible]. A friend of mine [illegible] says at first his horse [illegible] to care for it, but now [illegible] oats until Purina [illegible]. It seems to be a [illegible] give it a trial.

[illegible] exactly see what the [illegible] convention has to do [illegible] of the last legislature, or [illegible] with any particular local [illegible]. But at all events the [illegible] State and county [illegible] have passed a unanimous [illegible] that Columbiana [illegible] relief from the bill [illegible] the last General Assembly providing for the removal of [illegible] court house from that [illegible] Calera. Altogether, [illegible] has been a very good [illegible] I hope the next will equal [illegible] it.

Failure To Cooperate.

[illegible] man who was [illegible] Kentucky politician [illegible] demagogue than a statesman [illegible] according to Short Stories [illegible] boasting that his [illegible] cooper in an obscure town [illegible] that he was "one of [illegible] and didn't belong to the [illegible] aristocracy."

Editor Banner.—In reply to R. W. Ontodt, who says he is a new writer, so we can look over his sentiments to some extent. But in regard to the children's day, we all agree with them, when he or she says "I see the little folks taught by such a self contradicting fair maiden." She is a christian and is not trying to burlesque anyone; she is only in the discharge of her duty. And in regard to the lemonade, it will be free for the Sabbath-school. The insinuations that were used in that letter are looked over (and will always be). After the children in New Salem community drink their lemonade they won't be as dead then as our new writer is now.

Wednesday night brings about cheerful thoughts in our community. That is true, for they are proud of their good works.

And now Mary, I wonder if the new writer is married or can marry.

The third Sunday exercise is not opposed by the people in this community, we don't think.

I wonder if a small barrel can be set in a large one, if so, where would the small barrel hoops be?

Hoping to meet a grand success at New Salem next Saturday and Sunday, I remain yours truly.

E. H. Fennel.

Thorsby, Ala., June 10, 1901

Editor Banner.—It does seem to me that something should be done with Wiley Vines, he is liable to destroy property at any time, and besides that he is not decent enough to go in public. I think it a disgrace to the county to let a person of unsound mind rove about half clad, hungry, diseased, liable to die on the road or ramble off into the woods and die. It is not only a disgrace to the county, but it is a sin. I don't know the law in regard to the matter, but something should be done with this man for the sake of humanity if nothing else.

Yours truly, J. Bien.

DEATH OF MRS. ELIZABETH TAYLOR.

Death has visited our community again, taking from us on June 4th Sister Elizabeth Taylor, wife of Brother William Taylor. She was 59 years old, and was a member of the Missionary Baptist church twenty-five years. She was always faithful and true. She was an invalid for nine months and had every earthly comfort that a devoted husband and loving children and kind friends could render unto her, till God saw fit to call her home. The funeral services were conducted by Brother W. Parrish in the presence of a large crowd of sorrowing relatives and friends.

A little money may be made to reach a long way. A copper cent has been drawn out into 5700 feet of wire.

Bavaria is using American locomotives. No part of the earth is now uninvaded by American enterprise. And it is still marching on.

When an actor produces one of Shakespeare's plays now he publishes his version of it, just to show how little William knew about his business.

France thinks it is cheaper to build than to pay rent and has bought 70,000 square feet of land in Washington on which to erect a sumptuous embassy building to be the home of her diplomatic officer to the United States.

A Missouri naturalist has discovered that every toad is worth $19 to the farmer on whose place it operates. He might get the women to believe it if he would go on now and discover that the price was marked down from $20.

In such times of insanity as these everybody who is tempted to risk his savings in Wall street ought to memorize the advice old Commodore Vanderbilt gave to his son, after neatly shearing his superfluous wool: "Never buy what you can't pay for, and never sell what you haven't got."

The last Congress appropriated the sum of $300,000 for the preservation of our forest lands. A regular force is to be established, the salary of each of whom is to be $3 per day and $3 per diem for livery and traveling expenses. This is a practical step in the right direction.

The magnitude of the hat and cap industry in the United States is possibly not fully comprehended. That it may be the better understood it can be said there are over 200 factories devoted to that class of headwear. They give employment to 25,000 individuals and turn out a finished product of $25,000,000 annually.

The longevity of women—and of peeresses—finds conclusive illustration in the fact that four widows of Revolutionary soldiers are still on the rolls, their ages ranging from eighty-five to eighty-nine. Needless to say, they were young girls when they married the Revolutionary veterans, one of these interesting weddings having occurred as late as 1841.

It has been calculated with reference to British Columbia that at the present rate of consumption it would take 70 years to exhaust the more valuable supplies of timber, and as, under the husbandry of nature, forests will renew themselves in less time than 700 years, the calculation is merely a way of indicating that the timber resources of the Pacific coast are practically inexhaustible.

The fact that the rapid increase in land values in New York City makes the desirability of a site utterly outweigh every other consideration is shown in a very striking manner by the demolition of the historic Stewart mansion. This building, the first of the palaces which the rapid increase in wealth has made numerous in the metropolis, was built literally without regard to expense. Its marble and bronze staircase cost $50,000; its roof was of solid copper, its outer railing of carved marble. Yet, states the Dry Goods Economist, we have it on good authority that all that the Stewart estate realized on it was $600, this being the price that a dealer in second-hand building materials agreed to pay for the privilege of tearing down and carting away what but a few years ago was one of the show places of the city.

Many educational reformers urge that school hours should be shortened, arguing that pupils get so mentally tired out that they cannot study to advantage in the latter part of the day. An article in the Psychological Review combats this idea, on the strength of a series of actual tests. The multiplication table, lists of words to spell, etc., were given to pupils in the morning and again given to the same pupils toward the end of the day, and it was found that there was no diminution whatever in the ability to do mental work. Dr. Thorndike, the author, contends that the lack of interest commonly seen in schools late in the day is not due to overwork of the pupils' minds, but to the fact that the pupils become bored by too much of the same thing. The remedy, he adds, is "not to give the student less to do, but to make it worth while for him to work, to make the work interesting."

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

Further Report of Alabama's Constitutional Convention.

Eleventh Day.

Ordinances Continue to Pour In—One Against Secession—Fewer Election Days—Child Labor.

Three hundred ordinances have been introduced to date, and no committee is yet ready to submit a report. The committee on the journal has been allowed a clerk. One hundred and sixteen delegates were present at this session. Several leaves of absence have been granted.

The principal measures proposed at this session were:

By Mr. Ferguson—To dispense with the necessity of indictment for grand larceny.

By Mr. Bulger—That all officers be elected by the people for four years except judges and clerks, and not eligible to succeed themselves.

By Mr. Burnett—That there shall be no secession from the Union.

By Mr. Burns—Licenses shall not issue to any persons under 16 years of age; also, giving the General Assembly the right to fix laws regulating child labor, but not hours for pay.

By Mr. Lowe—State and federal elections to be held on same day.

By Mr. McMillan—To exempt members of the national guard from poll tax.

By Mr. Whiteside—That the question to extend time and pay of convention be referred to judiciary committee.

By Mr. Sanford—To establish a commissioner of the industrial resources; also to appoint a committee of nine to suggest a seal for the state of Alabama.

Twelfth Day.

Those Ordinances Keep On Coming—Stenographic Report Stands—New Suffrage Scheme.

President Knox called the convention to order at 10 a. m. and Rev. Dr. Provence led in prayer. Roll call showed 126 delegates present.

Mr. Long's resolution to rescind the contract of the stenographic reports of the convention's proceedings, on the ground that they might be the means of the federal supreme court declaring the suffrage clause unconstitutional, was defeated by a vote of 91 to 40 after a heated debate, in which ex-Governor Oates took a prominent part in opposition.

A new suffrage scheme was introduced by Mr. Banks. It disqualifies criminals, all who commit fraud in election or who have abandoned wives or children. Two ballots are to be provided, one white and one colored. Those qualified to mark tickets shall be supplied white ballots, but if not a colored ballot and a marker and it shall count for only one-fourth of a vote. This, however, excepts old soldiers and their descendants.

Among the ordinances introduced were these:

By Mr. Pillans—To allow no person to vote who cannot speak English.

By Mr. Sanford—To make the governor, secretary of state, auditor and treasurer, commissioners of railroads, to discharge all the duties now conferred on railroad commissioners.

Mr. Weakley made the first report from a standing committee. He reported favorably with a substitute, a resolution classifying cities and towns of the state into four classes; also, favorably, with a substitute, the resolution relating to issuance of bonds by municipal corporations only by vote of the people, and adversely the ordinance regulating the granting of franchises by cities and towns.

Thirteenth Day.

The Shortest Session Yet—No Committee Reports—A Week's Adjournment Proposed.

One hundred and twenty-six delegates attended this session which was a short one. An hour and a little over was the time the convention sat, the roll being called for introduction of ordinances and resolutions; no committee was ready to report.

Twelve ordinances and eight resolutions was the day's grist. Prominent among them were:

By Mr. Sanford—To strike out part of the preamble which declares that no state has a right to secede.

By Mr. Pearce—That no man learned in law shall hold office except of a judicial nature. This caused much laughter.

By Mr. Samford—No imprisonment for debt except where persons receive money or goods for a service and refuse to perform it.

By Mr. Foster—No new ordinance shall be introduced after June 10th; that the convention recess one week on that date, the committees to sit in the meantime and prepare reports.

By Mr. Foshee—To base representation in the general assembly on the white population.

By Mr. Watts—The state to purchase the remainder of the block on which the capitol is located.

Fourteenth Day.

The Governor's Salary—Pardon Board Created—One More Suffrage Scheme—No Back Taxes.

One hundred and thirty-one delegates were in session for two hours today and refused to adjourn until Monday by a vote of 64 to 50.

The report of the committee on executive was submitted. It creates office of lieutenant governor; terms of state officers are lengthened to four years; salary of governor is increased to five thousand dollars; the governor ineligible to office within one year after the expiration of his term, and his acceptance of the office of governor is a pledge to the people that he will not accept appointment or election to the United States senate during his term; provides a board of arbitration and conciliation of labor, and a board of pardons.

A resolution extending sympathy to Governor Samford in his illness was adopted by a rising vote.

Other matters presented were:

By Mr. Blackwell—A suffrage scheme calling for six months residence in precinct; educational and poll tax qualification not applying to voters in 1867 or their descendants; disqualifies persons guilty of election frauds.

By Mr. Knight—An ordinance to abolish office of back tax commissioner.

By Mr. Reynolds—To prohibit employment by corporations of boys under 12 and girls under 14.

By Mr. Smith—To devote money from sale of fertilizer tags to education.

Fifteenth Day.

Real Constitution Building Begins June 10th—The State Seal—Printing the Laws.

Roll call showed 104 members present. The convention adopted a motion that when adjourned today it meet at noon Monday. Only about a dozen measures were proposed at this session. Prominent among them were:

By Mr. Sanford—To change the state seal; he presented a resolution with a design symbolizing the story of Emma Sansom and General Forrest fording Black Creek, one of the most romantic incidents of the war on Alabama soil. It was received with great enthusiasm.

By Mr. Burns—To make fees of constables uniform throughout the state.

By Mr. Case—To compel children to support indigent parents.

By Mr. Glover—To authorize the legislature to reconstruct the judicial system of the state; also to abolish common right of law and courtesy of husband and wife, and substitute an inheritable interest in each other's estate.

By Mr. Greer—To require general laws to be printed in three daily papers and local laws in the county papers.

The ordinance on executive department was made the special order for June 11th, after the regular order is completed.

Sixteenth Day.

Some More Ordinances and One Partial Committee Report—Woman Suffragist Address.

One hundred and three delegates were in attendance on this session and several more leaves of absence were granted. The principal ordinances introduced were:

By Mr. Eyster—For protection of local building and loan associations; to be exempt from license tax.

By Mr. Haley—To limit debts of cities and towns to three per cent of value.

By Mr. Long—To prohibit judges from remitting fines or bonds.

By Mr. Sanford—No person of foreign birth not naturalized shall own real estate.

By Mr. Watts—Three fourths of capital stock must be paid in before corporations are organized.

By Mr. Williams—To exempt all property of Confederate soldiers' widows over $1,000 in value.

A report was made for the committee on printing reporting favorably the ordinance requiring an aye and nay vote on all ordinances making appropriations.

When the convention concluded its labors Miss Fannie Griffin was invited to address it. She read an address on the female suffrage question that was well received.

A significant fact has been discovered by a new trustee of the Indiana Reform School for Boys. Being of a statistical bent he began an investigation into the parentage of the boys, and learned that of the 400 who were committed for simple intractability 300 are the children of step-parents—122 having step-fathers and 178 step-mothers. As the boys are of average intelligence, and have shown no bad traits while inmates of the institution, the trustee has concluded that they were sent to the Reform School merely to rid their homes of their presence. In other words, the step-parent in most cases has trumped up charges against the boy and had him committed to the institution rather than be burdened with a step-child. Certainly the presence of so large a proportion of step-children must be considered suspicious, and in a majority of the cases it is probable that the children are less to blame than the step-parents, observes the Philadelphia Record.

The labor cost of making steel in the United States is less than half the labor cost in Great Britain.

HOW THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE ARE MAKING HISTORY.

NEWSY NOTES FROM ALL ITS SECTIONS

Little Girl Accidentally Killed—Victim of Cigarettes—Alabama's Governor Ill—Car Building—Industrial Notes of Interest.

MORE THAN A THOUSAND CARS

A Big Contract Secured by an Anniston Plant.

The Southern Car and Foundry Company is in receipt of orders for 200 cars from the N. O. & N. E. R. R., 325 from the Florida East Coast Railroad, and for fifty flats from the O. K. & G. R. R. All of these orders will be filled at the Anniston plant of the company. In addition the plant here has orders ahead for 700 coal cars from the Southern Railroad, making orders enough ahead to run the plant to its fullest capacity to the first of next year. Coal cars are to be very heavy and the most expensive manufactured in this city. Steel trucks will be used and the machinery for making this class of trucks in Anniston is expected to arrive at an early date. They will be the first steel trucks to be made in the south.

MARENGO'S PLUM.

Valuable Railroad Improvements Coming.

Marengo county has an exceedingly bright future ahead and within the year will see much development of its natural resources. The extension of the Birmingham, Selma and New Orleans railroad to Thomaston and Linden would of itself prove a vast benefit to the county, which has had railroads only on its extreme northern and eastern boundaries, but a meeting has been held which means the projection of another line of railroad to run from Thomaston to Uniontown, and then to either the Cahaba or Warrior coal fields. Experienced railroad men are at the head of the movement and work on the new road will be begun in a few days.

KILLED ABOUT A DOG.

West Bennett, a white miner, was probably fatally shot at Ishkooda Saturday night by Jake Pinkston, a negro recently released from Coalburg prison. The shot was fired from a 44-caliber revolver, the bullet enter- the neck of the white man almost penetrating the jugular vein; it passed through the neck, cutting several blood vessels. The affray was the result of a quarrel about some one stepping on a dog the negro claimed. The assassin escaped.

GOVERNOR SAMFORD ILL.

Governor Wm. J. Samford is very seriously sick at Tuscaloosa, where he and Mrs. Samford are visiting friends. The governor's ailment is enlargement of the heart. The latest reports from his physicians are that the executive is improving, but he is by no means out of danger.

DECATUR'S NEW SEWERS.

The city of Decatur has closed a contract with a Chattanooga concern to construct a complete sewerage system, costing $28,500, work to commence about July 1.

GOING TO SEE ABOUT IT.

Congressman William Richardson will depart next week for Washington with a party of Sheffield business men. Their mission to the capital is to look after matters pertaining to the improvement of the Tennessee River at Colbert Shoals.

ROCKEFELLER INTERESTED.

The Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute has been notified by John D. Rockefeller that he will be glad to provide the money for the erection of one of the much-needed dormitories for boys at the institution.

A NEW MANAGER

For the Tennessee Coal Iron & Railroad Company.

General Manager G. B. McCormack of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, after a service extending through twenty-one years, will leave the employ of the company at an early date. His successor has not yet been named.

A CIGARETTE FIEND

Puts a Bullet in His Side, and Will Probably Die.

About 7 o'clock Friday morning Frank Meacher, a young jeweler from Aiken, S. C., attempted suicide in Birmingham by shooting. The bullet passed through his left side just below the heart, inflicting a wound, which, while not necessarily fatal, the chances of recovery are very slender.

Cigarettes are believed to have been the cause of the attempt at self-destruction. The young man was an inveterate smoker of cigarettes and it was apparent to anyone that his constitution had been very much affected by their use, much nervousness being betrayed at times.

When the physician attended the wounded man he asked him why he shot himself, and he replied: "Oh, that's all right." He would not make any statement. Meacher is about 25 years old and has a wife and little daughter in Aiken and his wife has been notified of his condition. No note or message of any kind was left by the would-be suicide that might have thrown any different light upon the act.

SHOCKING FATALITY.

A Young Girl Accidentally Killed By a Boy.

Agnes Forsythe, a 14-year-old girl, was shot and instantly killed in the public road near Wylam Friday afternoon by Mat Marshall, a lad of 16 years. The little girl's head was nearly blown from her shoulders by a load of birdshot from a double-barreled shotgun. Marshall, who was the only witness to the sad occurrence, claims that the shooting was purely accidental. The boy says he was walking along the road with the loaded gun across his shoulder when Agnes Forsythe playfully ran up behind him and jerked the gun barrel. The weapon was discharged, the entire load entering the girl's head shattering the skull and causing instant death. From all the evidence obtainable the coroner was of the opinion that the shooting was purely accidental.

T. C. I. CO. IMPROVEMENTS.

Capacity of Red Mt. Ore Mines Will be Increased Fully Fifty Per Cent.

The Tenessee Coal, Iron & R. R Company has announced that an enlargement of the mining equipment of the Red Mountain ore mines will be made. This enlargement will increase the present capacity of the Red Mountain mines about 50 per cent. The company also announces that new Dolomite mines will be opened for work near Bessemer.

The work of placing the machinery and arranging for the increase of the capacity of the mines will be begun without delay, and will be pushed forward as rapidly as possible; every effort will be made to finish the enlargement during the summer months. The new Dolomite mines to be opened for work are situated near Bessemer. Superintendent Ball says this work will also begin at an early date, and will be rapidly pushed to completion.

CROPS DESTROYED.

Reports from lower Lauderdale county are very discouraging over the prospects for cotton and corn in the Tannessee bottoms. The high water has drowned out crops already planted and many acres will not be replanted on account of the lateness of the season and the fact that it will take several weeks for the land to dry out sufficiently to plant.

CAPITAL $1,200,000.

Corona Coal and Coke Company.

The Corona Coal and Iron Company, with $1,200,000 capital stock, has been organized and is in possession of its properties, which lie in Walker county. All deeds have changed hands, and Mr. J. B. Finley is president. The properties are in operation by the company, which proposes to operate the mines steadily and it is probable that other business than that of mining coal and manufacturing coke will be done eventually by the concern. The first pay day will occur this month.

and the consequence is our colleges have no discipline and hazing seems to be as popular as ever. I thought that this hazing business was a modern invention, but in the second volume of "American Literature" I find a letter of John Lawson, a Scotchman, who lived for years among North Carolina Indians. He is writing to his folks at home in 1714 about the customs of those Indians, and says the way they make warriors of their young men is to husquenaw them in early manhood. They are shut up in a dark log house for six weeks, and kept half starved and made to drink a concoction of pellitory bark, which renders them raving mad. They make the most dismal, hellish cries and howl-ings ever heard. When given a little meat it is mixed with a nasty, loath-some, filthy stuff. After six weeks they come out as poor and miserable as creatures ever become. Some of them die under this diabolical treatment, and some young men run away to avoid it. The savages told me that this hardens them to the fatigues of war and kills off the weak and infirm and cowardly who would bring disgrace upon the nation. Husquenaw-ing! That's it, that's where hazing started, and West Point is where it matriculated and flourished!

This insubordination of college boys seems to have crept into our own southern institutions, and has well-nigh demoralized Oxford and Tuscaloosa. What does it mean? We had nothing like it in our day. We feared our fathers and we feared and respected the faculty. The Tech boys caught the infection not long ago, but that don't matter very much, for if those boys do anything else besides play ball, the newspapers don't publish it.
Ball seems to be the only textbook in the curriculum. Their accomplishments in that line may be satisfactory to the boys and the professors, but the patrons and friends of the institution are surfeited, and would advise a recess. Ball play is another Indian game in which the savages excelled.—

He artfully brought his want and his ware into the market.

An epidemic of benevolence fills the air in these days, and the infection of good will and good deeds is spreading wider and wider. LIVES UNDER A BUSH.

Census Takers in Ireland Discover an Eccentric Irishman.

The census takers have made a remarkable discovery in Epping Forest, where an old man has been living under a bush for nearly forty years and has now for the first time been reckoned among the population of England.

A census taker said he could find somebody of whose existence England had never heard. On the strength of this invitation people accompanied him to the borders of the forest, where a wreath of smoke issuing from a holly bush gave the first indication of this modern Robin Hood's whereabouts. Under the bush was found a wizened old man, gnarled and crabbed as the bush itself.

A layer of leaves a foot deep formed the bed on which this wild man of the woods reposed. A few sticks placed upright formed the shell of his habitation and the leaves of the holly bush served for the walls of his cave. The inhabitant was a taciturn old Irishman, whom even the offer of a whiskey flask failed to thaw out. While munching a thick slice of bread he grunted out chapters of his life history in reply to questions.

He had been ten years before the mast in the royal navy, afterward for fourteen years in the merchant marine. Then he sought out his relatives in the vicinity of Epping Forest, who received him kindly. But, unwilling to trouble them as boarder, he decided to find his own quarters. The forest offered the most suitable refuge and therefore he had camped out under the bush for more than thirty years.

He was born in Cork in 1828, and is still a virulent patriot. His name is William Birk. For food he relies on the charity of the people of the neighboring villages, where he usually goes for his Sunday dinners. He has a small income, a government pension, which provides the necessaries of life. For water he relies on the pools of the forest, which he declares are far superior to the water supplied in towns.

He has a vivid recollection of the events of forty years ago, but of modern happenings he knows nothing. Speaking of France he talked of the Emperor Napoleon as still reigning.

Ethics of the Bad Man.

The bad man is not necessarily bad at all, says E. C. Little, in Everybody's Magazine. He is often a very good fellow. Bad is merely a synonym of dangerous. The "bad" man was formerly the "good" man. He is simply the frontiersman whose evolution has kept pace with that of the firearm—product of the border and the six-shooter. Keen of eye, quick of hand, and strong of will, he has that supremacy which always comes to the man of cool and clear-headed personal valor everywhere, except in society's latest and most refined development. The term was used rather to express the feeling that he was, in the vernacular of the border, "a bad man to monkey with." To govern and control communities in which vicious men were not infrequent, where all were restless and the majority turbulent, the ordinary forms and servants of justice were inadequate. Law and order required the assistance of officers who, though enlisted to keep the peace, did not hesitate to be a law unto themselves. If civilization was afraid to endorse their actions, it was at least proud of the results of the labors of the peace officer of the border. Hickok, Tom Smith, Patrick Shurgrue, Michael Shrugrue, William Tighlam, Hector Thomas and a score of other men as marshals, sheriffs and deputies enforced the law, made life safe and property secure, and brought order out of chaos by their ready courage and good sense. As Wild Bill Hickok was the original, so was he the first of the class.

Relative Length of the Seasons.

If the year be divided into two seasons, the warm and cold (the warm season including the time when the daily temperature is above the annual average), it is found that the warm season is longer than the cold for nearly all parts of the United States. The exceptions are in the Rocky Mountains region and in certain small areas in the lower Lake region and the middle Atlantic States. The longest warm season is in the Northwest, and on the middle California coast, where it exceeds the cold season by thirty to fifty days.

The longest cold season is found in the Rocky Mountain region where it exceeds the warm by about ten days. The warm season in Texas and the lower Missouri Valley opens about ten days earlier than in the region near the middle Atlantic coast and from twenty to twenty-five days earlier than on the southern coast of California. In the Northwest the warm season opens from twenty to twenty-five days earlier in the Lake region and from fifteen to twenty days earlier than in the north Pacific coast region.—New York Sun.

Looked Into Three States.

Passengers on the City of Chicago, which arrived at St. Joseph, Mich., the other day, reported that on the trip across the lake they were able to see three States from the pilot house—Illinois, Indiana and Michigan.

The principal buildings of Chicago were recognizable, Montgomery, Ward & Co.'s tower and the Masonic Temple standing out in bold relief. Spires in Michigan City, Ind., also were plainly seen, as was the smoke issuing from factory chimneys. At the same time the passengers could see the clay banks just south of St. Joseph, in Michigan, and several times caught glimpses of the higher buildings of St. Joseph.—New York Times.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

DISCOURSE BY THE EMINENT DIVINE LAST SUNDAY.

Subject: Duty of the One With a Single Talent—Try to Make an Accurate Estimate of Yourself—The Value of Sympathy.

(Copyright 1901.)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—This is a discourse by Dr. Talmage for those given to depreciate themselves and who have an idea that their best attempts amount to little or nothing; text, Matthew xxv, 15, "To another one."

Expel first from this parable of the talents the word "usury." It ought to have been translated "interest." "Usury" is finding a man in a tight place and compelling him to pay an unreasonable sum to get out. "Interest" is a righteous payment for the use of money. When the capitalist of this parable went off home, he gave to his stewards certain sums of money, wishing to have them profitably invested. Change also your idea as to the value of one talent. You remember the capitalist gave to one of his men for business purposes five talents, to another two, to another one. What a small amount to last, you think, and how could he be expected to do anything with only one talent? I have to tell you that one talent was about $7200, so that when my text says, "To another one," it implies that those who have the least have much.

We bother ourselves a great deal about those who are highly gifted or have large financial resources or exalted official position or wide reaching opportunity. We are anxious that their wealth, their eloquence, their wit, be employed on the right side. One of them makes a mistake, and we say, "What an awful disaster." When one of them devotes all his great ability to useful purposes, we celebrate it, we enlarge upon it, we speak of it as something for gratitude to God. Meanwhile we give no time at all to consider what people are doing with their one talent, not realizing that ten people of one talent each are quite as important as one man with ten talents. In the one case the advantage or opportunity is concentrated in a single personality, while in another it is divided among ten individuals. Now, what we want to do in this sermon is to waken people of only one talent to appreciation of their duty. Only a few people have five talents or ten talents, while millions have one. My short text is like a galvanic shock, "To another one."

The most difficult thing in the world is to make an accurate estimate of ourselves. Our friends value us too high, our enemies too low. To find out what we are worth morally and mentally is almost impossible. We are apt to measure ourselves by those around us, but this is not fair, as they may be very brilliant or very dull, very good or very bad. Indeed there are no human scales that can tell our exact moral and mental weight, nor is there a standard by which we can measure our exact intellectual height, so the hardest thing to do is to calculate our real stature or heft. But it will be no evidence of egotism in any of us if we say that we have at least one talent. What is it and, finding what it is, what use shall we make of it? The most of the people, finding that they have only one talent, do as the man spoken of in the parable, they hide it. But if all of the people who have one talent brought it out for use before this century is half past and correspondents begin to write at the head of their letters 1950, the earth would be one of the outskirts of heaven. I ask you again, What is your one talent?

Is it a cheerful look? Carry that look wherever you go. It must come from a cheerful heart. It is not that inane smile which we sometimes see which is an irritation. In other words, it must be a light within us so bright that it illumines eye, cheek, nostril and mouth. Let ten men who are accustomed to walking a certain street every day resolve upon a cheerful countenance as a result of a cheerful heart, and the influence of such a facial irradiation would be felt not only in that street, but throughout the town. Cheerfulness is catching. But a cheerful look is exceptional. Examine the first twenty faces that you meet going through Pennsylvania avenue or Chestnut street or Broadway or State street or La Salle street or Euclid avenue, and nineteen out of the twenty faces have either an anxious or a vacant look. Here is a missionary work for those who have trouble. Arm yourself with gospel comfort. Let the God who comforted Mary and Martha at the loss of their brother, the God who soothed Abraham at the loss of Sarah and the God of David, who consoled his bereft spirit at the loss of his boy by saying, "I shall go to him;" the God who filled St. John with doxology when an exile on barren Patmos and the God who has given happiness to thousands of the bankrupted and persecuted, filling them with heavenly riches which were more than the earthly advantages that are wiped out—let that God help them. If He takes full possession of your nature, then you will go down the street a benediction to all who see you, and those who are in the tough places of life and are run upon and behed and had their homes destroyed, will say: "If that man can be happy, I can be happy. He has been through troubles as big as mine, and he goes down the street with a face in every lineament of which there are joy and peace and heaven. What am I groaning about? From the same place that man got his cheerfulness I can get mine. 'Why are thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him who is the health of my countenance and my God.'"

Again, is your talent that of wit or humor? Use it for God. Much of the world's wit is damaging. Most of satire has a sting in it. Much of caricature is vitriolic. In order to say smart things how many will sacrifice the feelings of others! The sword they carry is keen, and it is employed to thrust and lacerate. But few men in all the world and in all the churches realize that if wit is bestowed it is given them for useful, for improving, for healthful purposes. If we all had more of it and knew how to use it aright, how much it would improve our Christian conversation and prayer meeting talk and sermon! Robert South and Rowland Hill and Jeremy Taylor and Dean Swift and Lorenzo Dow and George Whitefield used their wit and their humor to gather great audiences and then lead them into the kingdom of God. Frivolity is repulsive in religious discussion, but I like the humor of Job when he said to his insolent critics, "No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you," and I like the humor of the prophet Elijah, who told the Baalites to pray louder, as their god was out hunting or on an excursion or in such loud conversation that he could not hear them. I like the sarcasm of Christ when He told the self-righteous Pharisees that they were so good they needed no help. "The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick," or when in mirthful hyperbole He arraigns the hypocritical teachers of His day who were so particular about little things and careless about big things, saying, "Ye blind guides that strain at a gnat and swallow a camel," and the Bible is all ablaze with epigram, words surprisingly pat and phraseology that must have made the audiences of Paul and Christ nudge each other and exchange glances and smile and then appropriate the tremendous truths of the gospel. There are some evils you can laugh down easier than you can preach down. The question is always being asked, Why do not more people go to church, prayer meeting and other religious meetings? I will tell you. We of the pulpit and the pew are so dull they cannot stand it. But when we ask why people do not go to church we ask a misleading question. More people go now to church than ever in the world's history, and the reason is in all our denominations there is a new race of ministers stepping into the pulpits which are not the apostles of humdrum. Sure enough, we want in the Lord's army the heavy artillery but we want also more men who, like Burns, a farmer at Gettysburg, took a musket and went out on his own account to do a little shooting different from the other soldiers. The church of God is dying of the proprieties.

Is your talent that of persuasion? Make good use of it. We all have it to some extent, yet none of us think of it as a talent. But it is the mightiest of talents. Do you know that that one talent will fetch the world back to God? Do you know it is the mightiest talent of the high heavens? Do you know that it is the one talent chiefly employed by all the angels of God when they descend to our world—the talent of persuasion?

Do you realize that the rough lumber lifted into a cross on the hill back of Jerusalem was in persuasion as well as sacrifice? That is the only, absolutely the only, persuasion that will ever induce the human race to stop its march toward the city of destruction and wheel around and start for the city of light. Now may the Lord this moment show each one of us that to a greater or less extent we have one talent of persuasion and impel us to the right use of it.

You say you cannot preach a sermon, but cannot you persuade some one to go and hear a sermon? You say you cannot sing, but cannot you persuade some one to go and hear the choir chant on Christmas or Easter morning? Send a bunch of flowers to that invalid in the hospital, with a message about the land where the inhabitants never say, "I am sick."

There is a child of the street. Invite him into the mission school. There is a man who has lost his fortune in speculation. Instead of jeering at his fall go and tell him of riches that never take wings and fly away. Buckle on that one talent of persuasion, O man, O woman, and you will do a work that heaven will celebrate 10,000 years.

Among the 114,000 words of Noah Webster's vocabulary and the thousands of words since then added to our English vocabulary there is one outmastering word the power of which cannot be estimated, and it reaches so far up and so far down, and that is the word "come." It has drawn more people away from the wrong and toward the right than any word I now think of. It has at times crowded all the twelve gates of heaven with fresh arrivals. It will yet rob the path of death of the last pedestrians. It will yet chime so loudly and gladly that all the tolling bells of sorrow will be drowned with the music. It is piled up in the Bible's climax and peroration, "And the spirit and the bride say come, and let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst come." Have it on the point of your pen, have it on the tip of your tongue. Monosyllables are mightier than polysyllables; and that word "come" is the mightiest of monosyllables. Shakespeare says of one of his characters, "She speaks poniards, and every word stabs." We may say of others, they speak words which are of balm and music, are light and life. Master one of those words, harness one of those words, project one of those words, prove the full plentitude and power of one of those words.

David Garrick, the dramatist, said he would give 100 guineas if he could say "oh" as George Whitefield said it. What might we not give if only we could say "come" as Jesus said it? Some one has said that syllables govern the world, and I think that one syllable might save the world. But I cannot particularize. Whatever be your one talent, cultivate it.

Once fully realize that you have something with which to enhance heaven and take hold of the eternities, and it will add a new bank of keys to the music of your soul. You are ordained to some kind of work by the laying on of the hands of the Lord God Almighty.

If you cannot do anything else, go around and feel sorry for somebody. When some one asked, "What is the secret of William Wilberforce's power?" the answer was, "His power of sympathy." And there are 10,000,000 people who have the same qualification if they only knew it.

Sympathy! If you cannot restore the child to that bereft parent or the fortune to that bankrupt financier or health to that confirmed invalid or an honorable name to that wrecked character, you can at least feel sorry for the misfortune or the bereavement or the suffering.

Sympathy! If you have not the means to do anything else, go and sit down and cry with them. That is the way Christ did when He went out to the desolated home in Bethany and the sisters told their sad story. He cried with them. Oh, cultivate that one talent of sympathy!

After the resurrection day and all heaven is made up, resurrected bodies joined to ransomed souls, and the gates which were so long open are shut, there may be some day when all the redeemed may pass in review before the great white throne. If so, I think the hosts passing before the King will move in different divisions. With the first division will pass the mighty ones of earth who were as good and useful as they were great. In this division will pass before the throne all the Martin Luthers, the John Knoxes, the Wesleys, the Richard Cecils, the Miltons, the Chrysostoms, the Herschells, the Lenoxes, the George Peabodys, the Abbott Lawrences and all the consecrated Christian men and women who were great in literature, in law, in medicine, in philosophy, in commerce. Their genius never spoiled them. They were as humble as they were gifted or opulent. They were great on earth, and now they are great in heaven. Their surpassing and magnificent talents were all used for the world's betterment. As they pass in review before the King on the great white throne to higher and higher rewards it makes me think of the parable of the talents. "To another ten." I stand and watch the other divisions as they go by, division after division, until the largest of all the divisions comes in sight. It is a hundred to one, a thousand to one; ten thousand to one, larger than the other divisions. It is made up of men who never did anything but support their families and give whatever of their limited means they could spare for the relief of poverty and sickness and the salvation of the world, mothers who took good care of children by example and precent starting them on the road to heaven, millions of Sabbath-school teachers who sacrificed an afternoon's siesta for the listening class of young immortals, women who declined the making of homes for themselves that they might take care of father and mother in the weaknesses of old age, ministers of the gospel who on niggardly stipend preached in the backwood meeting houses, souls who for long years did nothing but suffer, yet suffered with so much cheerful patience that it became a helpful lesson to all who heard of it; those who served God faithfully all their lives and whose name never but once appeared in print, and that time in the three lines of the death column which some survivor paid for, sailors who perished in the storm while trying to get life line out to the drowning, persecuted and tried souls who endured without complaint malignity and abuse, those who had only ordinary equipment for body and ordinary endowment of intellect, yet devoted all they had to holy purposes and spiritual achievement. As I see this, the largest of all the divisions, from all lands and from all ages, pass in review before the King on the great white throne I am reminded of the wonderful parable of the talents and more especially of my text, "To another one."

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JUNE 16.

Subject: Jesus Appears to John, Rev. 1: 9-20.—Golden Text, Heb. viii., 8.—Memory Verses, 17, 18.—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

9. "I John." John, the author of this book was St. John, the apostle, the son of Zebedee, the beloved disciple, and the author of the four other books of the New Testament that bear his name. "Your brother." A member of the family of God, a Christian. "Companion." "Partner" (R. V.) "In tribulation." A word derived from the threshing of wheat. It took hard blows of sorrow and persecution to separate the chaff from the wheat. John was at this time an exile for Jesus's sake, and had all the reasons other persecuted Christians had for being discouraged. "In the kingdom." He was a member of Christ's kingdom, which was in time to triumph over every enemy. "Patience." Meekly bearing all sufferings for the sake of his Lord and Master. "Patmos." This island is in the Aegean Sea, about seventy miles southwest of Ephesus. "For the word of God," etc. He was banished to this lonely place because he was faithful in expounding and obeying the word of God, and because he testified about Jesus. John was the only apostle who died a natural death; that is, if he ever did die, for John Wesley and others believe that he was translated. John survived all of the other apostles a whole generation. At the time he wrote the Apocalypse, Paul and the other apostles had been dead thirty years; hence John was truly the patriarch of the apostolic age.

10. "In the Spirit." Under the influence of the Spirit, and fired and quickened by the Spirit. "The Lord's day." The day made sacred to all Christians for all time by the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. It was the day of light and salvation. John arrived in Patmos late Saturday evening, spent the night in prayer, and with the opening Sunday morning the glorified Savior opened heaven to his vision. Why is our Sabbath the first day of the week? We see here the apostles kept the first day, and, because of its sanctity, called it the Lord's day. "Behind me," etc. This was his first intimation of the presence of Christ.

11. "Alpha and Omega." These are the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet. This is a figurative expression, used to show that Christ was "the source and the consummation" of all things. He is from eternity to eternity. "What thou seest." The prophetic vision that was revealed to him on that Lord's day. "A book." A parchmental roll. "Seven churches." "Seven" denotes perfection. Doubtless there were hundreds of churches in Asia Minor at that time. The reason why seven only are mentioned is because the church is the bride of Christ, and seven is the sanctified number always representing Christ. Four represents humanity, as man is the king of the world, specified by the cardinal points, north, south, east and west. Three represents divinity—Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Christ is both man and God; therefore, seven symbolizes Christ. "In Asia." This Asia does not have reference to the continent of Asia, nor to Asia Minor, but to a small province in Asia Minor called Asia, of which Ephesus was the capital. "Ephesus." Mentioned first because the church here was the largest and most important.

12. "The voice." He turned to see who it was that spoke, the word "voice" being used to signify the person speaking. "Golden candlesticks." Compare Zech. 4: 2-11. Lampstands would be a better term.

13. "In the midst." Showing Christ's presence among His people. "The Son of man." Compare Dan. 7: 13. This term is used here because His glory might hide from view His oneness of sympathy with His people. "A garment." This is a description of the long robe worn by the high priest. Jesus is our high priest in heaven. "Girt—golden girdle." He was girt around the breast (R. V.) as "a sign of kingly repose." It represented "the breastplate of the high priest, on which the names of His people are engraven."

14. "White like wool." Wool is supposed to be an emblem of eternity. The whiteness signified antiquity, purity and glory. With Christ, His hoary head was no sign of decay. Compare Dan. 7: 9; 10: 6. The whiteness, three times mentioned (white, white wool, snow), is greatly intensified, and denotes unlimited age, even eternity. "His eyes," etc. This certifies His omniscience. The eye is the great receptacle of knowledge, and symbolizes all the senses.

15. "Burnished brass" (R. V.) This denotes His stability and strength. His feet are like brass when in the furnace and subjected to a very great heat. His feet were "strong and steadfast, supporting His own interest, subduing His enemies and treading them to powder." "His voice." Described the same in Ezek. 43: 2. He will make Himself heard; it is a commanding voice that must be obeyed; it is terrible in its denunciation of sin.

16. "In His right hand." The "right hand" is an emblem of power. "Seven stars." These stars are the faithful preachers of the gospel. "A sharp two-edged sword." His word, which both wounds and heals, and strikes at sin on the right hand and on the left. This wonderful sword has two edges, sharp as God's lightning—the edge that saves and the edge that destroys. Compare Heb. 4: 12; Eph. 6: 17. The sharpness of the sword represents the searching power of the word. "As the sun." We know of nothing brighter than the sun shining in its strength. Christ is the true light. John 1: 9.

17. "As dead." His countenance was too bright and dazzling for mortal eyes to behold, and John was completely overpowered with the glory in which Christ appeared. Compare Ezek. 1: 28; Dan. 8: 17. "Right hand upon me." His hand of power and protection, in which the churches were held. "Fear not." There is no occasion to fear when in the presence of Christ.

18. "The living One" (R. V.) The source of all life—the One who possesses absolute life in Himself. "I was dead." I became a man and died as a man; I am the same One you saw expire on the cross. "I am alive." Having broken the bands of death, I am alive "for evermore." "The keys." An emblem of power and authority. "Of death and of hades" (R. V.) Hades is a compound Greek word, meaning the unseen world, and including both heaven and hell. Gehenna is the Greek word which always means hell, and nothing else. Christ has power over life, death and the grave.

19. "Which thou hast seen." The visions he has just seen. "Which are." The actual condition of the seven churches. See chaps. 2 and 3. "Which shall be." In the future of the church.

20. "The mystery." Write the mysterious—the "secret and sacred" meaning of what you have seen. "The angels." The ministers or pastors in charge.

A great record in gunnery has been made by the crew of the new battleship Wisconsin. In target practice from the great thirteen-inch guns down, 137 men proved to be first-class marksmen and 156 second-class out of a crew of 444. This is all the more remarkable in that it is the first cruise of the Wisconsin, and there has scarcely been time to "shake down" her ship's company.

GOVERNOR Samford died at Tuskaloosa on Tuesday night. A good man and a good Governor has gone from us, and Alabama mourns.

Governor Samford was a native of Georgia and was 57 years old. He removed to Alabama with his father in early life, and the family settled in Lee county. At 17 he enlisted in the Confederate army and served through the war between the states.

In 1878 So the represented the Third Alabama district in Congress, after which he devoted himself entirely to his law practice for several years. He was then elected State Senator and was twice president of the Senate.

In April, 1900, he was nominated by the State Democratic convention for Governor, and was elected in August following. His health broke down early in last October, and afterwards for two or three weeks his death was daily expected. Being physically unable to discharge the duties of the Governorship at the expiration of Johnston's term, December 1, President of the Senate Jelks became acting Governor and remained so until January 1, when Governor Samford took office.

About five weeks ago Governor Samford became so ill that he went to Stafford Springs, Miss., where he remained for two weeks, going from there to Tuscaloosa, where he has remained very ill ever since.

Under the constitution President of the Senate Jelks becomes Governor of the State to hold office until December 1, 1902.—Age-Herald.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

The committees began to report last Wednesday. The committee on municipal corporations reported favorably on an ordinance providing that no city, town, county or district shall make debts without authority from the people.

On Friday the committee on executive department reported a substitute for Article V of the constitution of 1875. It provides for a Lieutenant Governor, and extends the term of all executive officers to four years, fixes the salary of the Governor at $5,000 per annum, makes the Commissioner of Agriculture and the Superintendent of Education executive officers, and creates a Board of Pardons and a Board of Conciliation.

On Monday the convention heard an address by Miss Frances Griffin on the right of women to vote.

Tuesday, the first two sections of Article V were adopted by the convention. These are the two sections providing for a Lieutenant Governor, and giving the head of the Agricultural Department the title of Commissioner of Agriculture and Industries, and invests the Governor with supreme executive power.

The following ordinances were introduced by Mr. L. H. Reynolds:

Be it ordained by the people of Alabama in convention assembled. That it shall not be lawful for anyone to hire or to cause to work in any factory or other public work, except a farm, any boy under the age of 12 years, or any girl under the age of 14 years. And any person hiring any such boy or girl for such work shall be imprisoned and fined therefor in accordance with a law to be enacted by the General Assembly. And such an act on the part of a corporation shall ipso facto forfeit the charter of said corporation.

That no parent shall receive or appropriate to himself or herself, the wages or earnings of their children, nor shall the earnings of said children be paid over to said parents, put to a guardian, appointed by a court, who shall keep and use such money and earnings for the benefit of the child itself, until discharged by the appointing court Provided, that said guardian shall pay over a portion of said wages to such parents as may be invalids and thereby incapacitated to earn a support. The General Assembly shall enact appropriate legislation to enforce this provision. Referred to committee on corporations.

Be it ordained by the people of Alabama in convention assembled. That Section 5 of Article VIII. of the constitution of the State of Alabama be amended so as to read as follows:

All laws creating, regulating or affecting boards or officers charged with the duty of registering voters, or of distributing ballots at the polls to the voters, or of recieving, recording or counting votes at elections, shall secure equal representation of the two political parties which, at the general election next preceding that for which such board or officers are to serve, cast the highest and the next highest number of votes. All such boards and officers shall be appointed or elected in such manner as the said parties may publicly make known at least thirty days before the election. Referred to committee on Suffrage and Elections.

Be it ordained by the people of Alabama in convention assembled. That Section 2 of Article VIII, of the constitution of the State of Alabama be amended so as to read as follows:

All elections by the people shall be by ballot, and all elections by persons in a representative capacity shall be viva voce. And every ballot voted shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received, and the number recorded by the election officers on the list of votes, opposite the name of the elector who represents the ballot. Any elector may write his name upon the ticket, or cause the same to be written thereon, and attested by a citizen of the district. The election officers shall be sworn or affirmed not to disclose how any elector shall have voted, unless required to do so as witnesses in judicial proceedings. Referred to committee on Suffrage and Elections.

Be it ordained by the people of Alabama in convention assembled, that Article VIII of the constitution of the State of Alabama be amended by adding thereto the following as Sections 8 and 9:

Sec. 8. Any person who shall give, or promise, or offer to give, to any elector, any money, reward or other valuable consideration, for his vote at an election or for withholding the same or who shall give or promise to give, such consideration to any other person or party for such elector's vote or for the withholding thereof, any money, reward, or other valuable consideration for his vote at an election or for withholding the same, shall thereby forfeit the right to vote at such election; and any elector whose right to vote shall be challenged for such cause, before the election officers shall be required to swear or affirm that the matter of the challenge is untrue before his vote shall be received.

Sec. 9. Any person who shall, while a candidate for office, be guilty of bribery, fraud or willful violation of any election law, shall be forever disqualified from holding an office of trust or profit in this commonwealth; and any person convicted of willful violation of the election laws, shall in addition to any penalties provided by law, be deprived of the right of suffrage absolutely, for a period of ten years. Referred to the committee on suffrage and elections.

THE next State Teacher's examination will be held on first Monday in July, 1901, at Clanton.

Animals That Bloom.

Anemones, sponges, the sea cucumbers and certain other growths which bloom and apparently behave in all respects like plants are really animals.

The petals of the anemone, resembling those of a chrysanthemum, are really tentacles to catch food and put it into the hollow tube which forms the stomach, where it is digested. The sea cucumber has a flattened body. It occasionally moves at a snail's pace over the mud or sand, digging its petals, or arms, into the sludge for food, to obtain which it swallows a fair proportion of mud. It has power to sting and so keeps away its enemies.

The sea lily so exactly resembles the common lily that it is difficult to realize that it is an animal and belongs to the starfish family. It has a stalk two feet long, with a disk for a body. The tentacles close round the disk, which has a mouth, and completes the deceptive likeness. They are the oldest form of animal life on earth, and their fossils are called "stone lilies."

These creatures were believed to be plants and many people still refuse to believe otherwise.

Milk.

An English physician, commenting on the tendency of London bred persons to die young, says that they drink too little milk. Even in the country "milk is not such a common article of diet as it was in past years, and children are not nourished according to hygienic laws."

A new virtue is ascribed to milk by The Practical Druggist, which says it is the best general preventive of the absorption of poison by the human system.

TEETHINA was first used by Dr. Charles J. Moffett, a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pa., in his extensive and successful treatment in Georgia in overcoming the troubles incident to teething and hot summer. TEETHINA (Teething Powders) counteracts the effect of hot weather and keeps the digestive organs in a healthy condition, and has saved the lives of thousands of children in the doctor's native state, where physicians prescribe and all mothers give it, and it is criminal in mothers of our section to allow their babes and little children to suffer and perhaps die when relief can be so easily obtained by giving TEETHINA. It costs only 25 cents at druggists; or mail 25 cents to C. J. Moffett, M. D., St. Louis, Mo.

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Dealers have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, snuffs, gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucious membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. Respecting the Sabbath.

One Sunday I called at a cottage in the south of Midlothian and requested a measure of milk, which was promptly handed to me. I offered the woman who attended to my wants a few coppers, but she gurtly responded, "I canna tak siller on a Sawbath!"

I thanked her, and was turning away when she whispered: "Mon, ye can drop the bawbees in that tub wi' the graith (soap suds) in't. I'll get them oot the morn!"—London Chronicle.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Pasturage Cheap Cow Feed.

According to some tests made at the Minnesota experiment station, comparing the cost of producing butter by means of silage and pasturage, the silage is shown to be the more expensive feed, the difference amounting to $2.95 per acre.

The Drain Outlets.

Tile drain outlets should be looked after at this season of the year. Trash and silt may have lodged so as to prevent the free flow of water. Stock will often tramp around outlets to drink the warm water flowing out of the tile drain, rather than sip ice water to be found elsewhere. Muskrats will carry trash into the tile occasionally, and pretty effectively stop up the drain. A screen wire, with inch meshes fastened securely over the mouth of the drain, will prevent any trouble from muskrats or other animals entering the drain. We have known rabbits, when hard pressed, to enter the mouth of drains when little water is flowing and go up so far as not to be able to return, die and stop up the drain. Half inch iron rods driven into the earth firmly one inch or more apart will be effective in keeping out varmints.—Drainage Journal.

Use of Special Milking Pails.

In speaking of the recent Indiana dairy conference on the necessity of keeping milk clean, Professor C. H. Eckles, of Ames, said that it is not unusual for a spoonful of milk to contain as many bacteria as the entire population of the United States. The flavor of the butter depends upon the species of bacteria. In summer, when the cows sleep out of doors, the beneficent bacteria general dominate, but when milked in the barn in winter unclean germs fall into the pail and propagate rapidly in the warm milk. To keep them from dominating starters should be used to start the right kind of fermentation. He showed pail covers which protect the pails in great degree while milking is being done and keep filth germs from falling into the milk. By actual count he had found that fourteen times as many germs fell into the open pail as into the pail measurably protected in this manner. He said straining will not keep away bad results, as the milk filters through the lodged particles in the strainer and is tained.

Profit in Some Calves.

Many farmers with but two or three cows that drop their calves at different periods, find it profitable to allow them to run with the cows for three or four weeks. They can be sold to the local butcher at from four to six cents per pound live weight. As they usually weigh from 125 to 150 pounds each, it makes a sum greater than could be obtained from butter made from the cows during the same period.

Cows liable to inflamed udder are not troubled if the calf is allowed to run with them continually. Feeding several times per day the calf does not allow the udder to become full. With Jerseys or other small breeds the profit is not so great, as the live weight at selling time is nearly fifty pounds less than a Durham or Holstein at the same age. It is almost as much trouble to attend to the milk from one cow as from two or three. It takes just as long to do the churning and care for the butter, hence by the vealing plan this matter can, in a measure, be regulated if the herd consists of several cows.—John C. Wickham, in Orange Judd Farmer.

How to Bridge Brooks.

Many farms are cut up by one or more small streams, the majority of which flow through pastures and have to be crossed by cattle morning and night. Unless the necessary "fords" are bridged, there is pretty sure to be a muddy crossing, and in that case cows are liable to get their udders badly soiled, with consequent trouble at milking time. It hardly pays to build a regular modern bridge, however; it costs too much and is not durable enough, especially under such conditions as usually exist in pasture streams. Rather should the simple affairs be resorted to shown in the illustration. Stout posts are set at an angle against each other, thus bracing one another perfectly, and over these are laid rough logs, the remaining space being filled in with dirt. Grass will soon grow over all, and keep the soil from washing, and this will add to the attractiveness as well as durability of the bridge. Such a bridge can be built strong enough to drive over with heavy loads.—F. O. Sibley, in Ohio Farmer.

BRIDGE OVER A FARM BROOK.

Number of Bees in a Colony.

The number of bees in a colony varies greatly considering all the four seasons. Perhaps in early spring a fair colony will not contain over 1000 or 1500 bees. There is no doubt that the number of bees in a colony has been to some extent over-estimated. Many have it that a colony in early spring has double the number given above, and when the season comes that they show their greatest strength, they are frequently put at from 50,000 to 75,000, etc. I am slow to believe a colony reaches this number, and I think that half the above number will cover the average colony. It is very true that exceptional colonies can be made to reach an immense number by preventing swarming.

A hive may be doubled in number and may be made to reach 75,000 readily by preventing it from swarming, and even these figures may be increased, but this is not a natural colony and should not be taken into consideration when the usual estimate is given of a normal colony. A good swarm of bees are said to weigh six or eight pounds. There is also said to be about 3000 bees in a pound, if they are not filled with honey, but as a bee can carry its own weight of honey, it would then seem that if filled with honey there would be half the number, which would be about 1500.

Almost every swarm carries with them as much honey as they possibly can, and we all know they are loaded down to the lowest capacity, so that if we deduct one-half for honey, we have a total of one-half the number of pounds, which is from three to four pounds, or about 10,000 or 12,000 bees. Such a swarm of bees will, when hived, seem to be a fair-sized colony, with exception of the combs being filled with brood, of course.—A. H. Duff, in Farm, Field and Fireside.

Weeds in Clover.

A friend tells of having a clover field that is full of "pigeon wheat." He does not want this to get ripe. He asks whether, if he cuts the clover early, before the wheat gets ripe, it will seed again in the second crop clover. He would plow the field in the spring and thus get rid of the pest, only he needs the clover for hay, and it would break up his rotation. Well, my friend, you have got me this time. I do not remember ever hearing of pigeon wheat. We have what we call pigeon grass, but I do not think you mean that. But it doesn't make much difference. This is what I should do: Mow the clover for hay before the pest is far enough advanced to ripen the seed. Then do the same with the second crop. Thus you will have hay and keep your rotation.

If you must cut the clover a little early you will have the consolation of knowing that what hay you make will be extra choice, almost equal to wheat bran, ton for ton, if nicely cured. This will make up for any loss in weight. You may be able to mow it three times, if season is wet, and get three crops of rich rowan. In Holland, the home of the Holstein cow, the grass is always cut when not more than ten or twelve inches high, when it is a complete food by itself, almost. Little grain is needed with it, and another crop soon grows in that moist land. Thus the cows have dried grass in winter, not hay, as it is commonly used in this country. When American farmers get over their rush somewhat, and have more time to study, grass and clover for cows, young cattle and sheep, will not be allowed to get as far advanced as it usually does now, before it is cut.—T. B. Terry, in Practical Farmer.

Comfort in Gardens.

I was born and brought up in the city, but my folks had quite a large garden just outside the city walls, and a little bit of a garden back of the dwelling house, and our neighbors had gardens and yards of their own, too, and in every one of these gardens, large and small, there was at least one summer house, vine-clad and shrub-surrounded. These summer houses were in most cases constructed of lattice-work, in a simple and cheap manner, with an open roof, the grapevines or other running plants climbing up on the sides and over the roof. In an uncle's garden the summer house was placed against the wall on the north, or further, end of the lot, and choicest grapevines were trained along the walls on both sides, and covered the summer house so [illegible] that there was a real cozy [illegible] any member of the family looking for a chance to rest, read or enjoy the luscious fruit of the vines. Many happy hours of my early boyhood have I spent in these summer houses. In all of them we had a table in the centre, with chairs or benches around it, and here we would play, or enjoy the fruits of the season, usually standing in a big fruit dish in the middle of the table, or read a paper or book, or write letters, or take our coffee and lunch. Old country people, in short, take time for comfort and for the enjoyment of the good things of life. On this side of the big water, in our anxiety to acquire the means to live, we forget to live and to enjoy life. I know that the summer house has added much to my pleasures in early life and to my love for home and family, and I believe that it is worth while to make use of so inexpensive means of adding to our children's pleasures and comforts and to their appreciation of home. This was the chief object I had in view in making my plea for summer houses.—Farm and Fireside.

FOR WOMAN'S BENEFIT

The Natal Stones.

The birth stones for the various months are as follows: For January, the garnet; February, the amethyst or pearl; March, the jasper, amethyst or hyacinth; April, the sapphire or diamond; May, the agate; June, the emerald; cat's eye or turquoise; July, the onyx; September, the chrysolite or sapphire and diamond; October, the opal or sapphire; November, the topaz or pearl; and December, the ruby or bloodstone.

These birth stones, worn in the form of pins, rings or charms, are supposed to bring health and prosperity and to guard the wearer from harm and danger.—American Queen.

Homes for Unmarried Women.

Sweden and Norway both boast a number of homes for unmarried women. One of these is especially attractive. It was endowed more than 200 years ago by a man who left the bulk of his fortune to his spinster descendants. The home is managed by salaried trustees, and the unmarried woman who can prove kinship to the founder is entitled to a home there. Each inmate has a private suite of rooms, servants and meals. She is subject to no rules other than those demanded at any first-class hotel. In Denmark a celibacy insurance company has been organized. If the holder of a policy is unmarried at 40 she receives a life annuity. If she marries before that time she forfeits her premiums.

Governess to Queen Alexandra.

Few people speak the English language more beautifully than Queen Alexandria, although it is not her native tongue. The first and only teacher of English to the Danish royal maiden was Miss Mathilde Knudsen, a Danish West Indian, born on King Christian's lovely little island of St. Croix, where her father was a planter. Among Miss Knudsen's other pupils were the Dowager Empress of Russia, the Duchess of Cumberland, Prince Waldemar, and four of the Crown Prince's children. Miss Knudsen, now in the evening of her life, resides in the fashionable quarter of Copenhagen near the royal palace of Amalienborg. On her frequent visits to England she has always been entertained by the late Queen Victoria, and the tokens of esteem which have been bestowed upon her by her royal imperial pupils have been numerous.

Summer Girl's Footwear.

The summer girl will wear shoes off the black, almost exclusively, and her favorite color will be the bright shades of tan. There is something material and suggestive of the golden slippers of song fame in a light shoe, while in a black shoe there is nothing particularly attractive, unless it be in the shape, the neatness, the size and the manner in wearing. Women with unattractive feet can, sometimes, put on a tan shoe with very good results.

The summer girl of 1901 will cling to black stockings, but they will be stockings that will be trimmed. They are clocking the stockings again and are running the clocks very high and finishing them with an embroidered flower. A straight clocking, running from the ankle up above the calf, say in a plain yellow with the clock not over three threads wide, is finished with an embroidered daisy. The daisy must be so high up that there will be no danger of its showing when the skirt is lifted.

The colored stocking is very pretty, but the summer girl will lay it aside for house wear.

New Styles in Weddings.

A new fashion in wedding dresses seems likely to become popular, writes Lady Violet Greyville in the London Graphic. The Duchess of Westminster wore an empire marriage gown of fine white net embroidered with silver over soft white silk, and a lace veil, and the effect was lovely if somewhat theatrical. Nothing in reality suits a bride better than the old-fashioned satin, lace and orange blossoms and the soft tulle veil. Lady Beatrice Butler was of this opinion, and she preferred ivory-white satin, trimmed with chiffon. Brussels lace, and a garniture of white violets. Her veil was also of lace, but she carried no bouquet. The French "mariee" is invariably simply dressed, however, high her rank in society may be. Mme. Deschanel, the beautiful young wife of the president of the French chamber, was married recently in a plain dress of white satin, with an immense train; it had no trimming but orange blossoms. On her head was placed a tulle veil and a small wreath of orange blossoms, while not a single jewel adorned her neck.

Why Women Fail in Business.

To the question, "Why do women fail in business?" the secretary of a woman's employment bureau in London recently said: "Not long ago I set myself to solve that problem. I had before me the particulars of some 250 girls and women for whom a certain society had been unable to find work. In nearly 100 of these cases want of training was set down as the chief reason that work could not be found. Of another 50 deficient education was the main hindrance. I think some women fail in business for these reasons—want of training, which is another name for lack of experience, and deficient education. If insufficient experience prevents a girl from being accepted as a clerk or nursery governess, how much more likely it is to prevent a woman from holding her own when she attempts in the face of commercial competition to establish any kind of business for herself. To master a business properly one should begin at the bottom and work upward. It is a fatal mistake to try to learn a business from the top, and those who have committed the blunder by constituting themselves employers and mistresses of large enterprises have often fallen to the bottom more abruptly than was pleasant. A girl's education should be both thorough and general, though it need not for commercial purposes be scholarly. She also needs preparation for the special kind of business which she intends to adopt. With this dowry and an average amount of mother wit a girl has little to fear. Indeed, I consider that in many manufacturing and commercial enterprises she has now an especially good prospect of success.——Chicago Record-Herald.

Novelties for the Neck.

The collarettes of the spring are improved editions of the boas of the fall. There are collarettes with ends that drop to one's toes and collarettes with no ends. Some of them fasten in front, some behind and some at one side. One of the newest and prettiest is of pale mauve pineapple-plaited silk muslin, edged with quillings of white tulle, made with long jabot streamers in a series of over deep lapping flounces, and diversified with little flat blue silk roses, set on to the pineapple-plaited surface at artistic intervals.

Another specimen is made in the form of two huge Tudor ruffs of tulle. The first is cream white laid upon one of equally full Jacqueminot red tulle and finished with double ropes of changeable red and white silk chenille. From Paris come evening boas made all of huge silk peonies. Silver cords hang nearly to the feet in front and are weighted at the bottom with peonies, one of which has inner stiffened petals that at the wearer's need can be transformed into a fan.

A goodly number of these neck ornaments are broadened out, in the centre of the back and on the shoulders, to serve as small fancy capes when the wearer drives, or requires a bit of a wrap after dancing. Costly and beautiful ones are made in the form of separate stitched silk leaves, upon which fall frills of fine lace, and the streamers in front are long ends of accordion-plaited chiffon covered with lace and held at intervals with oranmental circlets of brilliant paste. Beautiful as are the ostrich feather boas, they no longer retain their hold on feminine affection unless the feathers are intermingled with artificial flowers and lace. This is a degradation of their beauty, but for the present plumes are commonplace and hackneyed to a degree, and only the milliner who is more or less of a genius at combinations can make the woman accept the feathers under any guise.

A very conspicuous boa is made of silver tissue roses from which dangle a dozen or more fine silver chains with rhinestones fastened at inch intervals in their links. When worn with a black gown this silver collar is bound to produce an effect.—New York Sun.

FASHION NOTES

Pretty novelty hatpins have cherries or strawberries for heads.

An attractive feature of the season's packets is the little, cloth bolero to wear with foulards.

Ribbon velvet is the first favorite in trimming, and summer gowns of every texture will be adorned with row upon row.

Fashion reserves continual surprises for us. Now it is announced that tailor-made garments for summer are to be of taffetas, tammy and even foulard.

Grass linen and the silk and linen thin mixtures are once more in high favor, in a variety of styles. Stripes, cross lines in large squares and embroidery all appear and are equally pretty.

Traveling dust coats of black taffeta have a place in the fashionable summer outfit. The prettiest are tucked nearly all over, but the tucks add weight and warmth, neither of which is desirable.

Separate skirts of silk are in favor once more, with black taffeta in the ascendant. For the summer, however, the revived chameleon tinted silk will be largely used, with velvet ribbon and lace ruffles for trimming.

Summer velvets show metallic effects in stripes and flowers; pannes are as light as satin, and are used in combination with silk, satin and cloth wool barege comes in all-over embroidered floral effects, in white or colored grounds.

Fancy galons are exceedingly popular, and most beautiful. Gold, silver and copper threads often are interwoven in the ground, and the designs are in medallion form, or figures of classic subjects. Others are in open-work patterns made of dull gold.

The fashion of buttoning fancy waists in the back has extended to the shirtwaist, inconvenient as the mode seems. However, as buttons are used for fastening, it is not so impracticable as it seems, for slender, supple women. And, surely, no others should attempt it.

Picnic Day.

Are you coming to the picnic
In the wilds so fair and gay,
Eating, drinking, sleeping, thinking
Of the joys of picnic day?

Are you coming to the picnic
In the dreamy woods to stay
Where we spend the time in pleasure,
On that blessed picnic day?

Are you coming to the picnic
Coming where the robins sing
Hearing birds and children's voices
Through the woods so sweetly ring?

Soon our picnic days are over,
Soon our childish sports are o'er,
And the ones we met so often
Are the ones we meet no more.
—Chicago Record-Herald.

Loyal Little American.

A teacher who spent her vacation abroad tells the following story

One of her fellow passengers on the steamship that brought her home was a little boy about 10 years old. As the steamship approached New York the child grew exultantly happy and every little while he would say: "We're almost home now." He talked of the various objects they passed as though he were really quite at home. Finally the teacher said: "Do you live in New York?"

"No," answered he. "I live in St. Paul, Minn."

Miss L. remarked: "St. Paul! You are still a long way from home."

"This is just as good as home," said the loyal little fellow, "it's America."

The young traveler's patriotism so pleased the Columbus woman that she asked him about his travels, and learned why he was so glad to see America. He had been in Europe over six months, a part of which time had been spent in school in Sweden. He had seen much that was interesting in the different European countries, but was as pleased as he could possibly be on once more seeing his native land and stoutly declared that America was "the best country in the world."—Presbyterian.

Faster Than the Wind.

There are some parodoxes in physics that never grow old. By the time one generation gets through worrying over them another generation is ready to take them up, and so the interest they excite is perpetual, and the problems themselves are always new.

One of these problems is contained in the statement that a sailing vessel can sail faster than the wind that drives it. If it be moving directly before the wind it cannot, from the very nature of the case, have a greater speed than the wind itself; as a matter of fact, it will move more slowly than the wind on account of the resistance offered by the water. But if it move in a direction a few points off the direction of the wind it will move more rapidly than the latter.

A very simple illustration will make the matter clear. Place a ball at one side of a billiard table, and, with a cue held lengthwise, push the ball across to the other side, keeping the cue in contact with the ball all the time. Let the cue represent the wind, and the ball represent the vessel. Now, it is evident that the ball will not move more rapidly than the cue; on the contrary, they will move at exactly the same speed. But a vessel sailing directly before the wind would not move quite so fast as the wind, because the resistance of the water would retard it.

Now, imagine a groove cut diagonally across the table from the near left-hand corner to the far right hand corner. Place the ball in the left hand end of the groove and against it place the cue, held lengthwise, and push it across the table as before. The ball will travel along the grove and along the cue at the same time, and will reach the right hand end of the groove—across the table—in exactly the time that it takes the cue to move across. But as the ball travels much farther in going diagonally across the table than the cue does in going straight across, and as they reach the other side in the same time, it is evident that the ball travels faster than the cue does. In the same way a vessel, moving at an angle with the wind, sails faster than the wind that impels it.—Philadelphia Record.

Queer Meals in War Time.

When the Germans besieged Paris in 1870 they did it so thoroughly that the inhabitants of that city were soon hard pressed for food. Every one planted little gardens in window boxes, quite using up the seedmen's stocks in the effort to raise lettuce, radishes and asparagus, after a plan proposed by a learned member of the academy, while others tried to live on gelatin extracted from bones—another academician's scheme, which reduced some experimenters to bones without a trace of gelatin in them. Toward the middle of the siege—which lasted five months—horses, dogs, cats, canary birds and pet parrots were sold for food, and the lions, tigers, elephants and kangaroos from the public gardens brought high prices at the butcher shops.

One night when even the rich had been reduced to this sort of fare, there was a dispute between an Englishman and a French army officer. The former maintained that nothing could be made to take the place of good, wholesome beef, pork and mutton, while the latter held that all things could be made savory and nourishing in the hands of a master cook—that he himself knew enough of cooking to make a dinner of anything that came to his saucepans. As a test he offered to serve a dinner for the Englishman, the latter to eat without asking questions. He would guarantee the food would be tempting. Two [illegible] afterward the secret of the meal would be revealed.

The invitation was accepted, the pair sat down to table the following afternoon. They were served by an armed soldier servant, and those who had taken part in the repast, and who passed the dishes before them with [illegible] of pride and satisfaction, found a stew tasting strongly of some vegetable that had grown [illegible] to be procured only in Paris. The next course was a [illegible] macaroni, cooked in a manner [illegible] a prince. Then there [illegible] rabbit, brown and [illegible] dozen larks, almost [illegible] sauce. When the [illegible] Englishman declared [illegible] eaten better food, and particularly care [illegible] gone into its composition.

But two days after [illegible] the French officer [illegible] the secrets of his [illegible] had been made of rat[illegible] had caught around [illegible]. The butter used in cooking the dishes was nothing [illegible] marrow, extracted [illegible] the horse butchers were [illegible] away. Joseph knew a [illegible] paring it with saffron [illegible] licious butterine. The [illegible] was a large tomcat [illegible] had prepared after a [illegible] own while the dish of [illegible] posed of mice which [illegible] had very generously [illegible] in a large warehouse [illegible] employed. Only the [illegible] roni had been genuine [illegible] pieces obtained for the [illegible] at a shop where a small [illegible] mained.

In the Ant World.

When the summer vacation comes every boy and girl who goes into the country will some day come upon a colony of ants, either in the woods or along the roadside. If you have never watched the little creatures I would you to do so, every time you come across them, for they are a most interesting study.

Sir John Lubbock, as well as other scientists, has studied them, and these men all tell us wonderful and interesting stories about their life and life. A certain Frenchman says he has discovered that ants have a language of their own, and understand their meaning to each other by signs. This he proved to himself by taking up a number of them in a glass and holding it to the ear, as you would a watch, when the various signals could be distinctly heard.

An English scientist who has made a profound study of these little creatures says: "In their modes of living different species of ants have several peculiarities. Some are much less military than others, some have the power of distinguishing sounds and are highly sensitive to vibration. When we watch an ant hill swarming by thousands of industrious inhabitants, excavating chambers, building tunnels, making roads, guarding their homes, gathering food, feeding their young, tending their domestic animals, and even farming—each one filling its duty industriously and without confusion—it is difficult almost not to deny them the gift of reason."

Another close observer of these creatures says that he once saw a column of small black ants moving from one to more commodious quarters. The distance was over 700 feet, and every ant was laden with a piece of household goods. Some carried their eggs, the cocoon stage of the ant, and some had food. "I watched them for over an hour," says, "and I noticed that every two met on the way they would place their heads close together, as if kissing one another, and no matter how often the meeting took place the same thing occurred, as though a password was necessary. To prove more of it, I killed one that was on the way. Others which were eye witnesses of the murder went with speed and every ant they met this talking took place as before. But instead of a pleasant greeting it was sad news they had to communicate. I knew this by the sad news, for every ant that the messengers met hastily turned about and fled in another course. The news spread, and it was true. How was it communicated if not by speech?"

Young naturalists cannot find anything more fascinating than the study of ant habits; but murder, even of an ant, is not necessary in these studies, save to preserve a few specimens to assure one of the accuracy of such study. An ingenious and true lover of nature delights to devise means for such study that do not require any cruelty.

Taming an ant would seem an almost impossible feat, but it has been accomplished by the Father Wasmann, who keeps many different tribes of ants in artificial nests. He gradually trained one of the ants to come after its food, until finally it would take the honey directly from the tip of his finger, after which it allowed itself to be lifted on a card and carried back to the nest.—New York Tribune.

A Dude of 1770.

From a newspaper printed in the year 1770 is the following description of a dandy: "A few days since a macaroni made his appearance at the assembly rooms at Wh[illegible] dressed in a mixed silk coat, satin waistcoat and breeches, [illegible] with an elegant silk net, white stockings with pink clocks, [illegible] shoes and large pearl buckles, [illegible] mushroom; colored stock, [illegible] fine point lace; hair dressed [illegible] hly high and stuck full of pins."

THE LOCK AND KEY

Of Pekin's Forbidden City to be Exhibited.

The National Museum at Washington will soon place on exhibition the lock and key to the front gate of the Forbidden City in Pekin, China. The Chinese inscription on the lock will be translated. The lock is a cumbrous affair three feet ten inches long, and has four tumblers. The key is of iron and about four feet long. The lock and key were sent through Minister Conger as a gift to the National Museum by the Rev. W. T. Hobart, a Methodist missionary in China.

TENNESSEE TRAGEDY.

J. H. Wright late on Friday afternoon shot and perhaps mortally wounded A. J. Hunt near Randolph, Tenn., and killed A. L. Brumley shortly after shooting Hunt. It is claimed that Wright sent word to Hunt and a man named Booth that he was going to kill them. Hunt had gone to his stable to saddle his horse to go to Randolph and communicate with Sheriff Laderdale, when he was shot in the back and right hip by Wright. Wright immediately went to Booth's house, and after killing Brumley, disappeared in Sugar Creek bottoms. It is supposed that Wright mistook Brumley for Booth. Hunt is still alive, but his condition is critical.

RAGED FOR TWO HOURS.

Lexington, Ky., Has a Big Fire. Loss $80,000.

It was feared for some time on Friday that Lexington, Ky., would be laid in ashes. A fire originated in a negro cabin and as a furious wind was blowing the fire spread with such rapidity that few household furnishings were saved. Several children were seriously but not fatally burned. Twenty-three houses, mostly tenements, were totally destroyed with their contents. The loss approximates $80,000. Only about one-third of the property was insured.

STUDENTS AND POLICE CLASH.

Students of the University of Tennessee and five city policemen engaged in a fight Friday at Knoxville, in which numerous shots were exchanged but no one was hurt. The riot grew out of an attempt of the police to quell recent student disturbances with cannon. The police were called on by the commandant to stop the disturbances. This enraged the students who attacked the policemen, firing on them from behind trees on the campus and showering them with stones. The riot was not broken up until after midnight.

FITZHUGH LEE, JR., WOUNDED.

In a battle with the insurgents at Lipa, province of Batangas, Lieutenant Fitzhugh Lee, Jr., and five enlisted men of the Twenty-first Infantry were wounded. A captain and lieutenant of the same regiment were killed.

WANTS TARIFF REVISED.

The National Association of Manufacturers, at its annual session just closed in Detroit, adopted a resolution reading in part as follows:

"The object of tariff legislation should be to furnish adequate protection to such products only as require it, without providing for monopoly abuses. The tariff on goods, of which the cost of production is higher in the United States than in foreign countries, should be at least what is necessary to compensate domestic industry for the higher cost for production.

LOUISIANA HAS A CYCLONE.

A terrific cyclone passed across the extreme northwestern corner of Opelousas, La., Friday afternoon and almost completely demolished the extensive buildings of the Saint Landry cotton oil mill, killed a white boy aged 14 and seriously injured another, completely demolished three residences and damaged a portion of the office building of the Opelousas Ice Co. The path of the cyclone was about 400 feet wide.

EASTERN OKLAHOMA

Laid Waste by a Devastating Tornado.

The most severe storm since the opening of Oklahoma visited the territory Friday night. Its fury centured in a cyclone at about 6:30 p. m., which formed near the Kansas state line, and taking a southeasterly course, was most disastrous in Kay county. The town of Eddy was struck and every building in the place levelled to the ground except the railroad station and elevator. Flying lumber was scattered for miles. Three persons were killed and seven badly injured. Fine fields of wheat in the midst of harvest were laid waste. The tail end of the tornado fell with terrible force upon Tonkawa. Thirty dwellings and business houses were scattered like so much loose lumber. The country below did not suffer much from the storm except by washouts, a stiff wind and hail, which damaged wheat and fruit. The financial loss is about $100,000.

LOVE AFFAIRS.

Two Stories of Men and Their Sweethearts.

Nels Nelson, a farm hand, near Kingston, stung by the refusal of Mrs. John Ledig, a widow, to become his wife, shot and instantly killed her, seriously injuring her sister, Mrs. Peter Wing, and with an armed posse in pursuit blew out his brains.

Frank Taylor, of Oxford, despondent because his sweetheart married another man, attempted to drown himself in a tank of blood in a slaughter house at Pontiac, Mich., on Friday. He was assisting in killing cattle and when the tank in which the blood was retained became full, he jumped in. He was rescued.

BANK ROBBER SUICIDES

Rather than go to the penitentiary and serve a twenty-one years' sentence for the robbery of a bank in Aurora, Ont., Frank Rutledge committed suicide by jumping over the balustrade encircling a gallery in the jail at Toronto. He fell thirty feet, striking his head on the stone floor and fracturing his skull. He died without regaining consciousness. The suicide is the last of a series of sensational incidents connected with the arrest of three noted robbers.

CONGER NOMINATED.

Reports from the primaries in Iowa are favorable to ex-Minister Conger as the nominee for governor over A. B. Cummings, the only other candidate. Madison, the home of both candidates gave Conger the preference.

TRUE TO HIS TRUST.

Georgia Sheriff Shoots Four Men in Defending a Prisoner.

A mob of 300 white men broke into the jail at Carrollton, Ga., Friday in attempting to lynch a negro murderer. In front of the negro's cell the mob was confronted by Sheriff Merrill, revolver in hand. A fight ensued in which the sheriff shot and wounded four men, one of them, it believed, fatally, and another seriously. The mob fired on the sheriff, but he escaped injury. The governor ordered out the troops and had the negro carried to Atlanta for safe keeping.

Now the French seem to have come awake to the importance of American trade. That is a conclusive sign of the serious nature of the outlook from the European point of view.

A CAR OF DYNAMITE.

Was In This Terrible Railroad Wreck.

While a freight train was taking water at Vestal, ten miles west of Binghamton, N. Y., Saturday night it was run into by a freight. In a car of the stationary train was a quantity of dynamite which exploded. Six men were killed, three others are thought to be in the wreck, and a number of others are badly injured. The remainder of the crews escaped with slight injuries. The explosion completely demolished four freight cars. The shock was felt three miles.

The Colorado board of pardons has commuted to eighteen years the life sentence of E. O'Kelly, the man who killed Bob Ford, the slayer of Jesse James. O'Kelly has but four years to serve.

The Mobile & Ohio office at Sparta, Ill., was robbed last Friday night by two masked men, who bound and gagged the night operator and locked him in a box car. The safe was blown and $300 secured.

Johnny Suspects His Pa.

"Pa," said Johnny, looking up from his book, "what is the meaning of 'metempsychosis?'"

A look of confusion suddenly overspread pa's countenance, but it was only for a moment.

"'Metempsychosis,' Johnny, means—it means—but if I should tell you you would very soon forget the meaning. Look in the dictionary for it yourself, and then you will be more likely to remember. Information that comes without effort seldom lingers in the memory."

Half an hour or so later Johnny sought the dictionary in the library. When he got there he found pa with the dictionary open at "Met." Doubtless it was merely a coincidence, but Johnny could not help thinking that his pa was something of a fraud.—Boston Transcript.

Generous Great Britain.

Britain's "earth hunger" is a common sneer on the continent, but look at what we have given away without the least reason!

We took the Ionian Islands in 1809 and handed them over to Greece for nothing about 50 years afterward. Corsica shows George III as its king, but we abandoned it three years later, and the French naturally grabbed it.

Tangier came to us by the marriage of Charles II. We abandoned it at the end of 22 years.

We took Cuba in 1762 and handed it back to the Spaniards, after holding it for 10 months. We took the Philippines and returned them to the same country for $20,000,000—which was never paid.

Here is a short list of other places which we once held and gave up without compulsion: Minorca, Sicily, Sardinia, Buenos Ayres, Montevideo, Java, Pondicherry, Celebes, Moluccas, Elba and about 50 other places.

We took Cape Colony in 1795, but gave it up again to the Dutch. In 1806 we took it again—and kept it.—London Standard.

Burwell.

Rev. Mr Parrish, filled his regular appointment here Sunday.

They tell me that there is an awful fine set of gentlemen that compose the constitutional convention; some are bald headed, some are soft headed, some are wise and some are otherwise. Well, I will venture the assertion that they make a Jim Dandy, cracker-jack constitution, any way.

Mr. Andy, Cooper and family of Mountain Creek were at Corinth Sunday.

Among the many ordinances that have been presented to the constitutional convention by the great and wise men on the suffrage we have not seen any one that will knock the negro out and leave the white man. Why not make it illegal for any person in the State of Alabama to hold office unless he be a natural born true blue organized Democrat. Of course it would not matter then who voted. That is the only way the Kid sees for the Democrats to redeem their pledge and carry their points at the same time.

There is a move on foot to revive old Canaan church and have services every second Sunday. Let the good work go on.

We sympathize with the Morning Star in his bereavement over the death of the Kid, but would suggest his imagination concerning the death of the Kid is like some other things that happen in Beat five.

Mrs. Lizzie, Kendrick is said to be right sick.

We think a tooth carpenter could get a good practice in this vicinity, as there are several suffering with that complaint. BILLY THE KID.

Several of the girls and boys went to the C. N. I. last Sunday to hear Mr. Crumpton speak; reported a nice time.

Susie is not dead but she has had her funeral preached several times. I guess she is more lucky than some people.

When girls are infants mothers are anxious to keep matches out of their reach; to put matches in their reach is their greatest anxiety when their daughters grow older.

Some of our girls were all smiles Sunday, but some were not.

Catch on as catch can is the old maid's matrimonial plan.

What some people know would fill a book, but at the same time what they don't know would fill a library.

If Mr. Charlie would keep his little girl posted where to put her letters so her mamma would not find them I think he would get along a great deal better.

Is the Jemison critic dead?

Fish Fry and Family Reunion

Was the greatest thing of the day last Friday, at Moore's mill pond four miles east of Billingsley. There was about two hundred people in attendance. They had a bountiful supply of fish and other good things of which all present partook of freely. The crowd remained on the picnic grounds till late in the afternoon, then the young people retired to the residence of Mr. Gris Boles where they had a nice entertainment. The people of this section will long remember the kindness of the family and their every effort to make everyone present enjoy the occasion.

We are sorry to say that Mr Peyton Moore, who has been on a visit to his father, will return to his home in Texas next Monday.

HEANTON, - - - ALABAMA.

Queen Wilhelmina now realizes how sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to marry a bachelor with debts.

"The Extirpation of Rabbits," "Heaven's Dead Letter Office" and "Revivals by Constitutional Methods" have been recently announced in Australian newspapers as subjects of Sunday discourses. So it appears that America is unfortunately not the only country where sensational titles are chosen to attract listeners to sermons.

Besides being a thing of beauty and a joy forever, the Spanish moss grown in Florida is exceedingly useful. It is used in great quantities in upholstering, and it has recently been discovered that aside from this and other values, it makes an excellent strainer and purifier for cane syrups, the juice runs through it producing fined syrups than any in the world.

Patrolling of the Behring sea sealing grounds will be this year a task of the revenue marine, as it has been since the outbreak of the Spanish-American war. In conjunction with a few British war vessels, less than half a dozen United States revenue cutters have proved sufficient to protect the sealing grounds. Seal poaching, formerly as lucrative as adventurous, has become an extra-hazardous game, in which the blanks are many and the prizes few.

The girls in the "poor law schools" of Great Britain are not without ambitions. According to an English paper, one quarter of them want to be housemaids. There is one at least who wants "to be useful." Another desires to be at poetess or novelist. Another chooses to be a "lady adopting orphans," who must be first cousin to the girl who wants to become a duchess, being able to be "kind to little children," helping them "in different ways." The most difficult task set themselves by any of these poor children, however, is that essayed by the girl who would be a milliner, adding: "When I am making the hats I should make them neat and tidy and so help to get some of the pride out of people." There is a vein of shrewdness in the ordinary child, which even sad conditions of poverty cannot obliterate.

It will be a surprise to most lovers of Scott that the oak which he made famous in "Ivanhoe," the trysting oak in Harthill Walk, Sherwood Forest, fell but a short time ago. This great tree was one of the genuine relics of antiquity. It stood when the Romans were in England, and underneath its branches on the eve of St. Withold's day a letter of defiance to Front de Boeuf was written to "a holy man, clerk to God, Our Lady and St. Dunstan, in the chapel of Copanhurst," and signed by Wamba, son of Witless, the jester; Gurth, son of Beowulf, born thrall to Cedric the Saxon, and their allies, Locksley the yeoman, and the black knight. Where the oak stood is an ancient glade in Sherwood Forest, on the confines of the West Riding of Yorkshire and on the estate of the Duke of Leeds. The Duchess of Leeds purposes to save the trunk and have it placed nearby, with an appropriate inscription on it. Where it stood will be planted this spring a young tree to take its place.

J. D. Whelpley gives in the World's Work these startling statistics of President Diaz's administration: Twenty-four years of peace for a nation of 14,000,000 people who had been at war with others and among themselves for half a century; compulsory education; religious freedom; safety for foreign and domestic life and property; the creation of a middle class; a modern army of 38,000 trained soldiers armed with Mauser rifles and officered by graduates of a modern military school; representation for Mexico at the capitals of all foreign nations of importance; an increase from 420 to 8000 miles of railroad; an increase from $35,000,000 to $78,000,000 in the output of precious metals; an increase from $20,000,000 to $51,000,000 in imports, an increase from $23,000,000 to $75,000,000 in exports; the investment of $30,000,000 of foreign capital in cotton mills and millions more in breweries, paper mills and many other forms of enterprise; a general increase of wages paid for common labor from 18 to 60 cents a day; a government the expenses of which are always within its income and which has an accumulated surplus in bank of $18,000,000 in currency; a capital city with 400,000 inhabitants in which is now being spent about $10,000,000 for water, light, sewers and pavements.

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

Further Report of Alabama's Constitutional Convention.

Seventeenth Day.

The First Debate—Two Ordinances Adopted—A Lieutenant-Governor—Governor's Salary.

Roll call today showed 134 delegates present and after routine work the first actual business of the convention was done in the first debate. The ordinance on the executive department came up for discussion. The changes proposed by the committee are mainly to create a lieutenant-governor; to elect all state officers for four years, ineligible to succeed themselves, the governor to be ineligible to any other office for one year after expiration of the term for which he is elected; his salary to be $5,000; to give the governor power to remove sheriffs pending impeachment.

The first section was adopted as reported. Section 2 fixing the title of governor, as the Governor of the State of Alabama was adopted. Section 3 names the officers to be elected.

The most sweeping suffrage scheme yet brought forward was introduced by Mr. Burns.

Mr. Brooks, of Mobile, introduced an ordinance to define trusts and to prohibit the same in the state.

Eighteenth Day.

Because of Governor Samford's Death the Convention Adjourned Until Friday, June 14th.

The constitutional convention met at 10 o'clock and adjourned until noon June 14th, out of respect to the memory of Governor Samford. Immediately after roll call, which showed 134 members present, General Harrison offered a resolution which was unanimously adopted.

The president appointed the following committee to proceed to Tuscaloosa and escort the remains to the capitol: Harrison, of Lee; Robinson, of Chambers; Searcy, of Tuscaloosa; Jones, of Montgomery; Williams, of Marengo; Ashcraft, of Lauderdale; Cunningham, of Jefferson; Graham, of Talladega, and Davis, of Etowah.

Nineteenth Day.

A Short and Adjourned Session—One More Section Adopted After Very Lively Discussion.

The nineteenth day's session was called to order at 12 o'clock. Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Gay, who paid a feeling tribute to the virtues of the late governor. He prayed for the new governor, asking that the mantle of Governor Samford might fall upon him.

Roll call showed 139 members present. At the conclusion of the roll call, General Harrison offered a resolution that the convention recess until 2:30 o'clock, and that when it adjourn in the afternoon, it adjourn to meet at 2:30 o'clock Friday afternoon. The resolution carried.

At 2:30 o'clock it was again called to order and only 80 members were present, two more than a quorum. The only business done was the adoption of section three of the new article on the executive. This reads as follows:

The governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, treasurer, auditor, attorney general, superintendent of education and commissioner of agriculture and industries, shall be elected in August, 1902, and thereafter every four years by the qualified electors of this state, at the same time and places appointed for the election of members of the General Assembly.

Twentieth Day.

The Governor's Salary Not Fixed—Limitations of Officers—The New Sections Adopted.

At 2:30 p. m. the convention met, but only eighty delegates were present. Almost the entire session was taken up with the discussion of the salary to be paid the governor, and finally the convention decided to leave the compensation to be determined by the legislature. The salaries of the other state officers are to be fixed in the same manner.

Several sections of the article on executive were adopted. Section 5 places the beginning of the official year at November 15th and the terms of state officers at four years, making them ineligible to succeed themselves and the governor ineligible to hold any office for a year after the expiration of his term. Section 6 requires the governor and lieutenant-governor to be thirty years of age and gives the latter the right to vote only in case of a tie. Section 7 leaves the salaries of the state officers to the legislature. The vote on this was 88 to 41. Section 8 is: The governor shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

Twenty-First Day.

The Governor's Salary Again—Remitted Fines To Be Reported—Ancnt Woman's Suffrage.

Roll call showed 108 delegates present at the twenty-first day's session of the convention. The principal ordinances introduced were:

By Mr. O'Neal—To require the general assembly to increase the salary of the governor to $5,000.

By Mr. Greer—To allow commissioners' courts to fill all vacancies in county offices.

By Mr. Craig—To regulate woman suffrage. The resolution provides that all women who are permitted to vote must be over 20 years of age, must be able to read and write; husband must pay $5 in taxes or must have earned $300 the year preceding. Divorced women, with exceptions, cannot vote.

Four sections of the article on executive were adopted. Section 9 gives the governor the right to inquire imminently into the affairs of any state office. Section 10 grants the right to convene the general assembly in extra session. Section 11 requires the governor to inform the general assembly of the state of the government, accounts for moneys received or disbursed by his order, and present estimates of the amount of taxation. Section 12 gives the governor the right to pardon, parole, commute sentences or remit fines, under certain laws; names the board of pardons—secretary of state, attorney general and auditor—and prescribes its regulations; requires the governor to report to the general assembly the fines remitted and all other actions taken in such cases. The last provision reads: Pardons in cases of felony and other offenses involving moral turpitude shall not relieve from civil and political disabilities, unless specifically expressed in the pardon, and approved by the board of pardons.

Section 13, relating to governor's approval and veto power was under discussion when the hour of adjournment arrived. Adjourned to meet on Monday, June 17, at one p. m.

Twenty-Second Day.

Mr. Beddow's Sensation—An Odd Petition—Grand Jury Reforms—Two Daily Sessions.

The twenty-second day's session of the convention was called to order at 12 o'clock. Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Murphy. Roll call showed 114 members present. A number of leaves of absence were granted. The new business was as follows:

By Mr. Beddow—A resolution that at the expiration of fifty days for which the convention was called no per diem be paid to members. A suspension of the rules that his resolution might be put on passage was voted down by an almost unanimous vote.

By Governor Oates—To fix the number of grand jurors at not less than eighteen, ten of whom may find an indictment.

By Mr. DeGraffenried—To provide that accused may demand copy of indictment and have compulsory process for his witnesses and not be compelled to testify against himself.

By Mr. Kyle—To require all banks to furnish semi-annual statements of condition; to be printed in a newspaper published in the county where the bank is located.

The commissioners of Morgan county ask the convention not to reduce the special tax of ½ of 1 per cent for county purposes.

A substitute was reported for a resolution by Mr. DeGraffenried to regulate the sittings of the convention. The substitute provides two daily sessions; from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. and from 3 p. m. to 5 p. m. This report was tabled until necessary to act on it. Mr. Dent offered a resolution to have the convention begin its afternoon session today. This motion was lost.

Section 13 was under discussion when adjournment was ordered.

A sensational story is published that a Chinese contractor has been feeding his employes on glandered horses, which is said to account for the spread of considerable sickness in the vicinity of Manila.

It is reported that Senator Platt will retire from the United States senate at the end of his term in March, 1903. His determination has not been hastened, it is understood, on account of poor health.

The Mineral Springs Hotel, at West Baden, Ind., was destroyed early Friday morning. Of the 268 persons who were in the hotel fire, it is now believed that every one escaped. The loss on the hotel is estimated at $250,000, with insurance of $150,000. In addition to this the loss in diamonds, jewelry and clothing belonging to the guests will, it is estimated, reach $50,000. The hotel will be rebuilt as soon as possible.

Fifteen or twenty workmen, selected from as many different establishments and representing a variety of industries in Great Britain, are soon to be sent to the United States in a body to study the ways of their Yankee cousins. A month or more will be devoted to the task, and during that time the deputation will visit the principal manufacturing centres of the country. Each man is to be designated by the concern which employs him, but he is to be chosen from a number that have been nominated by their fellows. Employers and trade unions will co-operate in meeting the expense of the undertaking.

HAPPENINGS IN ALABAMA

HOW THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE ARE MAKING HISTORY.

NEWSY NOTES FROM ALL ITS SECTIONS

Two Murders—P. O. Robber Caught—Horsewhipped in Court—Pinkston Captured—Railroad Notes—Oil Struck — Huntsville Fine.

NEW RECEIVER.

Julius Davidson was named by Judge Bruce, of the United States court, as receiver for the Montevallo Coal and Railway Company, to succeed Burgess Little, resigned. Mr. Davidson is assistant United States district attorney at Birmingham. It will be recalled that former Receiver Little was cashier of the Bank of Montevallo, recently failed, and when that institution went under he sent in his resignation as receiver for the coal company. Receiver Davidson announces that he will reopen Dogwood mines, in Shelby county. The capacity of the mines is about seventy-five tons per day, and the company has a capital stock of $75,000.

BOILER EXPLODED.

The boiler of a saw mill belonging to Crow, Harden and Brompton exploded Friday morning killing the 18-year-old son of Mr. Harden instantly and scalding the sawyer, Mr. Copeland, so that it is thought he will die. Shortly before the explosion occurred the young man was attempting to fix a patch on the boiler and his father made him stop. The boiler exploded almost immediately afterwards. The mill was a small affair, using a traction engine.

A NEW PROFESSOR.

Dr. S. A. Steele, former pastor of McKendree church, Nashville, has accepted the chair of philosophy in the Athens Female College and will move his family at once and begin an active campaign in the interest of the college.

THE LAW IS VALID.

Decision has been rendered by Chief Justice McClellan of the Alabama Supreme Court, affirming the validity of the revenue bills passed by the last legislature. Two years ago the court declared the bill void because of irregularity in its passage, and for the reason that both bills have materially increased the whisky license, the Whisky Dealers' Association has fought a test case this year brought by W. T. Robertson, representing the whisky dealers of Montgomery, and Judge Sayre, of the City Court, decided against the whisky dealers. The Supreme Court upholds this decision.

THE NEW RAILROAD.

At a meeting of the promoters of the Decatur, Danville and West Alabama railroad held in Jasper, requests were made of the city for certain franchises and rights of way, and arrangements were made by which it appears these will be secured. Permanent organization will be perfected in the next four weeks and at once the work of construction will commence. Work will be started at the Jasper end to reach the coal fields and derive immediate revenue, but eventually work will also be pushed from the Decatur end. The desire is to connect the Tennessee and Warrior rivers with a short railroad, and this the new road will accomplish. The enterprise appears to be on a solid footing and will be pushed to completion.

BALDWIN BOOMING.

The work of building Baldwin county's new court house at Bay Minette has begun. The foundation is almost complete and the contractors say that they will have the brick work finished in a few weeks. The corner stone will be laid on the 4th of July by the Masonic fraternity, and there will be a free barbecue on that date. Alabama speakers will address the people.

An addition of more than 1,000 lots have been laid off and will be put on the market, and home seekers are already coming here with the view of locating.

R. R. EXTENSION.

The Selma, New Orleans and Birmingham Railroad has let the contract for an extension of twenty-seven miles from its present terminus in Marengo County. This will bring the road nearly to the Tombigbee river.

Agents will soon go east to close arrangements for the building of the Enterprise Southern railroad, which will run from Geneva, south. The building of the road is being rapidly pushed.

PROBABLE MURDER.

C. G. Mann Shoots and Mortally Wounds Dave Dickson.

Dave Dickson, of Montgomery, a railroad man, was shot and dangerously wounded at Monroe Park Sunday night by his brother-in-law, Charles G. Mann, chief clerk in the local office of the United States Inspector of Boilers and Hulls. Four shots were fired, two taking effect, one in the abdomen, probably a mortal injury.

On several occasions Dickson has upbraided Mann for his ill treatment of Mrs. Mann, and they had several quarrels. Dickson some days ago told some friends that Mann had threatened to shoot him. This evening as Mann saw Dickson, he put his hand to his hip pocket but Dickson pulled his gun first and Mann dropped his. Mann suggested both throw aside their guns and fight with fists. Dickson accepted and gave his gun to a friend. Mann then quickly picked up his pistol and fired four times: he was arrested.

PINKSION IN JAIL.

Jake Pinkston, the negro who shot and killed West Bennett at Ishkooda a week ago Friday night, was brought from Mobile and placed in the county jail. Pinkston has several bad cuts about his person and he claims that he killed Bennett in self-defense. The revolver with which he shot Bennett was found on him, an ugly looking Colt's 45 caliber, with a barrel about ten inches long.

PLANTER KILLS PLANTER.

A telephone message says that Jack Warren, a well-known planter of Madison Crossroads, was shot and instantly killed Saturday afternoon by Curry Turner, another planter. Madison Crossroads is in a section remote from telephone and telegraph communication and no particulars are obtainable. Turner is the son of Capt. Dan Turner, a Confederate veteran, and is well known. He has not been arrested.

SHE USED A WHIP.

At a trial before Squire J. A. Haraway in East Lauderdale, the woman in the case surprised the court and the lawyer for the prosecution by horse-whipping the man who swore that she had sworn falsely. Quite a sensation ensued and the man fled, while the lawyer also made himself scarce.

SUSPICIOUS.

A negro shot and killed a white man in Oakman, Walker county, a few days since. As he ran away he was fired upon with a shot gun. A negro with a charge of buckshot in his shoulder was arrested in Jefferson county on Friday, and tells an unconfirmed story about being chased and shot by a mob. The officials think he may be the murderer wanted.

OIL GUSHED OUT.

Reliable information is received that oil has been struck in Lawrence county. The well is flowing 500 barrels a day. It was an accident, as the boring was for an artesian well. In the same county prospectors discovered a vein of fine coal more than eleven feet thick.

ACKNOWLEDGED HIS GUILT.

The man who robbed the post office at Marion Wednesday night was captured in Meridian. He admits his guilt, and the money, about $127, was found on his person. He was placed in jail and the preliminary trial will be held soon. His accomplices are still at large.

ALABAMA RE-APPOINTMENTS.

Morris D. Wickersham has been re-appointed United States attorney for Southern Alabama. Mr. Wickersham was originally appointed July 24, 1897. There was no opposition whatsoever to his re-appointment. The President has thus re-appointed every one of the United States attorneys in Alabama, that being in line with the policy he prefers to pursue in every case.

Julian H. Bingham has also been re-appointed collector of internal revenue at Birmingham.

BOND FIXED AT $3,000.

The bond of W. W. Kidd, alleged defaulting County Superintendent of Education, at Guntersville, has been fixed at $3,000. It is thought he will remain in jail until his trial. He is very much improved in a physical way, the likelihood now being that he will recover fully from the wound made by the officer's gun in effecting his capture.

Dispatches from Leadville, Creek and other points in the state say that for a time Friday night. The wind was and dangerous. PINGREE VERY Ex Governor Pingree of Michigan is very ill in London. His life has been extended beyond the point from which he had been expected to recover. His physicians do not share in the apprehension, though they are careful of a favorable result.

TENNESSEE WIND

A tornado passed across the western part of Hardeman county Friday and completely destroyed the home of W. R. Moore near Middleton, named Wickson. Without warning the family escaped to a dug-out and saw their home demolished while two children of Mr. Moore were killed outright. Moore was badly injured and Tom Martin, a boy who was at Moore's home, was mortally fatally injured. The family escaped to a dug-out with only a scare and was unhurt.

SUPPOSED KIDNAPPING

E. D. Strong, a prominent citizen from Texarkana, Tex., has lost his 7-year-old son as a victim of kidnappers. The boy was put on a train at Waco on June 1st for his home, a distance of 250 miles. His parents and friends have not heard from him since. The state has been largely searched, but no trace has been covered. The father of the boy is in Dallas consulting the police detectives.

HE STILL RIDES

One of the boldest forgers ever operated in this country was given a sentence of seven years in the chaingang at Knoxville for the charge of forging railroad passes. This man was a lawyer and he has worked almost every road in the United States for free transportation. He travels from city to city on passes secured by means of forged letters, accompanied by his wife. He was sentenced at Knoxville after a long attendance upon the court.

POLITICAL THEFT

The roll call in the Colorado senate on the third reading and passage of senate bill No. 87, being the employers' liability bill, showed that the state paid $3,000 to have the roll call from the records of the Colorado Federation of Labor. The senate will sift the matter to the bottom and publish all concerned to the full extent of the law.

TENNESSEE FIRE

A special says that fire at Dyersburg, Tenn., destroyed the entire square, except three buildings, the entire loss estimated at $100,000 and insurance of $120,000. The cause of the fire is not stated. One man was slightly injured.

At an early hour Friday morning fire destroyed twenty-one business houses (Texas) business houses. Most of the contents were saved. The loss will amount to $100,000, with insurance of $25,000.

R. M. Glover, sheriff of Hardeman county, Texas, was killed by a posse. Schnabel was badly wounded by Mexicans. Details of the affair are not obtainable. The Mexicans escaped.

The State Epworth League convention, which has been in session at Columbus since Wednesday, completed its deliberations Friday night. They meet at Jackson in erson died suddenly this week.

He was only sixty-nine years old, and the opinion is that his grief and mortification over the great strike caused his death. A nobler rich man never lived or died. He was the president of the National Cash Register Company, that employed 2,200 men and women. For seven years he has sought to make his extensive works a model for all the manufacturers of the world and a workman's paradise. From time to time he has reduced the hours of work and increased the compensation. The cottages for his people were models of comfort—good gardens, nice flowers—a skilled man sent free to show them how to plant and grow flowers, a free library of well selected books, hospitals for the sick good nurses, good beds, all free and no lost time charged against them; bath rooms with hot and cold water and time given to bathe; clean towels and soap. For the women and girls he had toilet rooms and bathrooms and brushes and combs and even curling tongs provided, sofas and cots to recline on and books to read. Every thing was made as much like home as a loving mother would have provided. Half of every Saturday was theirs. Mr. Patterson was happy. He believed he had solved the problem of capital and labor. But about three years ago a labor union was formed and its committee began to hunt up devilment. Not long ago they discovered that the 2,000 towels that were furnished the bathrooms free were washed every week by some poor woman who did not belong to the union, and they demanded of Mr. Patterson that he have his washing done by union folks. He refused and the committee ordered a strike. Then he declared that his men were not charged for the baths nor the towels nor the soap, and he would stop the whole business, which he did. Next they ordered the discharge of his superintendent because he was not a union man. This was refused and they struck again. They also ordered that two union men who had been discharged for bad work should be restored. He restored them and paid them regularly $15 a week for each, but gave them no work, saying that they were not competent, but he would pay them. And so they hunted around for other things and finaly ordered a big strike, and it has been on for weeks and no settlement. Up to date the loss to workingmen in wages amounts to $120,000 and all these poor families are in distress and would go back if the union committee would let them. It was at Dayton where a few months ago the union crowd pursued some non-union men and knocked them down and hammered their fingers to a jelly with stones, so that they could not work any more. Mr. Patterson's works have been visited by progressive men from all countries, who wanted to see how he managed that great business without any clash between his capital and their labor, and now they say: "I told you so. I knew it would not last!"

It made me right sick to read about it, for it is much worse than I have told it. Is our sympathy for the poor all wasted? No—no! It is those contemptible leaders who got on the committee and wanted to make a big fuss out of nothing. With the great combination trusts on one side and the union strikers on the other side, we, the unproductive middle class, who make our living by our wits, are in a bad fix. But thank the good Lord, we still have meat and bread and strawberries at our house.—Bill Arp, in Atlanta Constitution.

That the higher education of women progresses even in Berlin, and despite the flat of the German Emperor that woman should confine herself to "cooking, church and children," is shown by the growth of the gymnasium course of study for women, established in that city seven years ago. It is now on a permanent rooting, with its future assured through having just become self-supporting. The whole period of study covers at present four and one-half years, at the end of which a certificate equivalent to that given to young men graduates of the old-fashioned gymnasiums is bestowed upon those completing the course. The attendance the past winter has comprised 71 girls, mostly daughters of professional men and officials. The instruction takes place in the afternoon, as the private association which founded it receives no further aid from the government than the loan of some teachers and schoolrooms after the male scholars have had their morning sessions. The progressive women who established the course are rightly proud of having achieved success in the face of almost universal public opposition, strengthened by the hostile court influence.

The project of cutting a canal through the north island of New Zealand is again revived. "The city of Auckland," says a correspondent of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, "is situated on the east coast of the island, but on an exceedingly narrow isthmus, and has large trade connections, both east and west. At the narrowest point the isthmus is only some three-quarters of a mile broad, but on both sides of this the water is shallow, and the canal, in consequence, would be a work of some magnitude. It is, however, of great importance, and would bring Auckland over a hundred miles nearer Sydney than at present."

THE CHINESE DENTIST.

The Practitioner After the Fashion of His Ancestors.

American industry is playing havoc with all time honored institutions. At one time the dentists formed an important guild in China, but in the past 30 years hundreds of bright Mongolians have picked up more or less knowledge of the profession from American practitioners abroad, and are now doing business according to modern scientific methods. In San Francisco the new school has almost driven the old one to the wall. Nevertheless, three or four of the latter pursue the calling in the same manner as their ancestors did for a thousand years. At least one of them visits New York every year, and stays two or three months until all of his customers have had their teeth put "in order."

His work is curiously primitive. For extracting he relies upon his fingers, and with these he does marvels. With thumb and forefinger he will pull a bicuspid or a molar on which an American operator employs a powerful forceps. This dexterity is the result of years of practice. From boyhood to manhood he is trained to pull pegs driven into a wooden board. Three and four times a day, half an hour at a time, he drives pegs into the holes of his practice board, and then pulls them out again. He lifts in similar fashion teeth to which are attached heavy weights. This special training changes the aspect of the hand. The spare flesh vanishes and the blood vessels and tendons seem to double in size. The forearm grows in girth and becomes as hard as wood. The apprenticeship period lasts two years. At the end the student has a finger grip which is a wonder. Its strength is equivalent to a lifting power of 300 and even 400 pounds. Beside extracting, he cleans teeth with a preparation containing ground cuttlefish, using brushes made of split bamboo. For toothache he employs opium, peppermint oil cinnamon oil and clove oil. Sometimes, though rarely, he fills teeth, but does it so ignorantly that the filling comes out within a few months.

Through all his practice runs a laughable element of superstition. According to his system all toothache and other dental woes are produced by toothworms. The nerve pulp is such a worm, and is always shown to a patient whenever the decay is great enough to permit of its exhibition. To satisfy others, he carries about in a pocket some white grubs about as large as an ant. When he extracts a painful tooth he uses a little legerdemain, and shows the sufferer one of the white grubs as the cause of all his pain. For neuralgic toothache he employs counter irritation and sedatives, rubbing the gums, cheeks and neck just below the condyle with a mixture of laudanum and peppermint oil, and pinching the skin until the blood is almost forced through the pores. He is not highly regarded by his countrymen, his social position being halfway between those of a barber and a laborer. In New York he gets 25 cents for removing a tooth and for other services payments in proportion.—New York Post.

The Sort of Table He Wanted.

The following conversation was overheard between a joiner and his customer a short time ago:

Joiner—Please sir, I've brought the table you ordered me to make.

Customer—Well, put it down here, my man, and let's see what sort of a job you've made of it.

The man set it down in the middle of the room, and the customer examined it with the air of a critic.

Customer—Why, my man, there is here a crack filled up with putty.

Joiner—Yes, sir; well, sir, I know about that, but it won't be noticed when it sets hard.

Customer (coming across some more putty)—But here's some more, my man; what is the meaning of this?

Joiner—Well, sir, you see, a little bit of wood chipped off the corner, and I just put a little putty there to fill up. It won't do no harm, sir, when it's set hard.

Customer (finding some more putty patches)—Look here, my man, this won't do; why, here's a big lump right in the middle of this leg. What can you say about that?

Joiner (scratching his head and trying hard to find some excuse by which to retrieve his honor)—Well, sir, that's no harm whatever, and the putty when it sets hard will be firmer than the wood, so you see, it will be all the better if you wait a bit, sir.

Customer (Sarcastically)—Here, my good man, just take this table home, and bring me one made of putty altogether. I want a good strong one, and you can fill up the cracks with wood.—Tit Bits.

Coal Was High.

The milkman, the butcher boy and others have caused this east end resident a great deal of trouble by recklessly driving over his well cared for lawn and destroying its springtime promise. At length, losing his patience, he had a warning sign constructed which read as follows: "Take the sidewalk—this means you."

Since that ill advised sign was placed the gentleman has noticed with growing anxiety the gradual disappearance of boards from his sidewalk, and when he emerged from his house the other morning he was astounded to find that most of the walk had disappeared and in place of the sign was a crudely scrawled "card of thanks" which contained the brief but expressive word of appreciation, "Thanks."

The East end resident has come to the conclusion that his neighbors were sadly in need of winter firewood and now he has adopted the conventional sign, "Please keep off the grass."

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

DISCOURSE BY THE EMINENT DIVINE LAST SUNDAY.

Subject: The Curse of Speculation—Integrity and Villainy in Wall Street—Lessons Drawn From Gambling Crazes Which Have Swept Over the World.

[Copyright 1895.]

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In this discourse Dr. Talmage arraigns the spirit of wild speculation and gives some account of the financial ruin of other days; Proverbs xxiii, 5, "Riches certainly make themselves wings; they fly away as an eagle toward heaven."

Money is a gold breasted bird with silver beak. It alights on the office desk or in the counting room or on the parlor centre table. Men and women stand and admire it. They do not notice that it has wings larger than a raven's, larger than a flamingo's, larger than an eagle's. One wave of the hand of misfortune, and it spreads its beautiful plumage and is gone, "as an eagle toward heaven," my textbook says, though sometimes I think it goes in the other direction.

What a verification we have had of the flying capacity of riches in Wall Street! And Wall Street is one of the longest streets in all the world. It does not begin at the foot of Trinity Church, New York, and end at the East River, as many suppose. It reaches through all our American cities and across the seas. Encouraged by the revival of trade and by the fact that Wall Street disasters of other years were so far back as to be forgotten, speculators run up the stocks from point to point until innocent people on the outside suppose that the stocks would always continue to ascend. They gather in from all parts of the country. Large sums of money are taken into Wall Street and small sums of money. The crash comes, thank God, in time to warn off a great many who were on their way thither, for the sadness of the thing is that a great many of the young men of our cities who save a little money for the purpose of starting themselves in business and who have $500 or $1000 or $2000 or $10,000 go into Wall Street and lose all. And if there was a time for the pulpit to speak out in regard to certain kinds of nefarious enterprises now is the time.

Stocks rose and fell, and now they begin to rise again, and they will fall again until thousands of young men will be ruined unless the printing press and the pulpit give emphatic utterance. My counsel is to countrymen, so far as they may hear of this discourse, if they have surplus, to invest it in first mortgages and in moneyed institutions which, though paying comparatively small interest, are sound and safe beyond dispute, and to stand clear of the Wall Street vortex, where so many have been swamped and swallowed. What a compliment it is to the healthy condition of our country that these recent disasters have in no wise depressed trade! I thank God that Wall Street's capacity to blast this country has gone forever.

Across the island of New York in 1685 a wall made of stone and earth and cannon mounted was built to keep off the savages. Along by that wall a street was laid out, and as the street followed the line of the wall it was appropriately called Wall Street. It is narrow, it is unarchitectural, and yet its history is unique. Excepting Lombard street, London, it is the mightiest street on this planet. There the Government of the United States was born. There Washington held his levees. There Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Caldwell and Mrs. Knox and other brilliant women of the Revolution displayed their charms. There Witherson and Jonathan Edwards and George Whitefield sometimes preached. There Dr. Mason chided Alexander Hamilton for writing the Constitution of the United States without any God in it. There negroes were sold in the slave mart. There criminals were harnessed to wheelbarrows and, like beasts of burden, compelled to draw or were lashed through the streets behind carts to which they were fastened. There fortunes have come to coronation or burial since the day when reckless speculators in powdered hair and silver shoe buckles dodged Dugan, the Governor-General of His Majesty, clear down to yesterday at 3 o'clock. The history of Wall Street is to a certain extent the financial, commercial, agricultural, mining, literary, artistic, moral and religious history of this country. There are the best men in this country, and there are the worst. Everything from unswerving integrity to tip-top scoundrelism—everything from heaven born charity to bloodless Shylockism. I want to put the plow in at the curbstone of Trinity and drive it clear through to Wall Street ferry, and so it shall go if the horses are strong enough to draw the plow.

First of all, Wall Street stands as a type in this country for tried integrity and the most outrageous villainy. Farmers who have only a few hundred dollars' worth of produce to put on the market have but little to test their character, but put a man into the seven times heated furnace of Wall Street excitement and he either comes out a Shadrach, with hair unsinged, or he is burned into a black moral cinder. No half way work about it. If I wanted to find integrity bombproof, I would go among the bankers and merchants of Wall Street, yet because there have been such villainies enacted there at different times some men have supposed that it is a great financial debauchery, and they hardly dare go near the street or walk up and down it unless they have buttoned up their last pocket and had their lives insured or religiously crossed themselves. Yet if you start at either end of the street and read the business signs you will find the names of more men of integrity and Christian benevolence than you can find in the same space in any street of any of our cities. When the Christian commission and the sanitary commission wanted money to send medicine and bandages to the wounded, when breadstuffs were wanted for famishing Ireland, when colleges were to be endowed and churches were to be supported and missionary societies were to be equippd for their work of sending the gospel all around the world, the first street to respond has been Wall Street, and the largest responses in all the land have come from Wall Street.

But, while that street is a type of tried integrity on one hand, it is also a type of unbounded swindle on the other. There are the spiders that wait for innocent flies; there are the crocodiles that crawl up through the slime to cranch the calf; there are the anacondas, with lifted loop, ready to crush the unwary; there are financial wreckers who stand on the beach praying for a Caribbean whirlwind to sweep over our commercial interests. Let me say it is no place for a man to go into business unless his moral principle is thoroughly settled. That is no place for a man to go into business who does not know when he is overpaid $5 by mistake whether he had better take it back or not; that is no place for a man to go who has large funds in trust and who is all the time tempted to speculate with them; that is no place for a man to go who does not quite know whether the laws of the State forbid usury or patronise it. Oh, how many men have ruined themselves in the vortex and gone down for the simple reason their integrity had not been thoroughly established! Remember poor Ketchum—how soon the flying hoofs of his iron grays clattered with him to his destruction; remember poor Gay, at thirty years of age, astonishing the world with his fortunes and his forgeries; remember that famous man whose steamboat and whose opera house could not atone for his notorious ride through Central Park in the face of decent New York and whose behavior on Wall Street by its example has blasted tens of thousands of young men of this generation.

I have not so much admiration for the French Empress who stood in her balcony in Paris and addressed an excited mob and quelled it as I have admiration for that venerable banker on Wall Street who in 1893 stood on the steps of his moneyed institution and quieted the fears of depositors and bade peace to the angry wave of commercial excitement.

God did not allow the lions to hurt Daniel, and He will not allow the "bears" to hurt you. Remember, my friend, that all these scenes of business will soon have passed away, and by the law of God's eternal right all the affairs of your business life will be adjudicated. Honesty pays best for both worlds.

Again, I have to remark that Wall Street is a type throughout the country of legitimate speculation on the one hand and of ruinous gambling on the other. Almost every merchant is to some extent a speculator. He depends not only upon the difference between the wholesale price at which he gets the goods and the retail at which he disposes of them, but also upon the fluctuation of the markets. If the markets greatly sink, he greatly loses. It is as honest to deal in stocks as to deal in iron or coal or hardware or dry goods. He who condemns all stock dealings as though they were iniquitous simply shows his own ignorance. Stop all legitimate speculation in this country, and you stop all banks, you stop all factories, you stop all storehouses, you stop all the great financial prosperities of this country.

Sedate England took its chance in 1720. That was the South Sea bubble. They proposed to transfer all the gold of Peru and Mexico and the islands of the sea to England. Five millions' worth of shares were put on the market at £300 a share. The books open, in a few days it is all taken and twice the amount subscribed.

Excitement following excitement until all kinds of gambling projects came forth under the wing of this South Sea enterprise. There was a large company formed with great capital for providing funerals for all parts of the land. Another company with large capital—£5,000,000 capital—to develop a wheel in perpetual motion; another company, with a capital of £4,000,000 to insure people against loss by servants; another company, with £2,500,000 capital, to transplant walnut trees from Virginia to England; then, to cap the climax, a company was formed for "a great undertaking—nobody to know what it is." And, lo, £600,000 in shares were offered at £100 a share; books were opened at 9 o'clock in the morning and closed at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and the first day it was all subscribed. "A great undertaking—nobody to know what it is!"

An old magazine of those days describes the scene (Hunt's Magazine). It says: "From morning until evening Change alley was full to overflowing with one dense, moving mass of living beings, composed of the most incongruous materials and in all things save the mad pursuit whereof they were employed utterly opposite in their principles and feelings and far asunder in their stations in life and the professions they follow. Statesmen and clergymen deserted their high stations to enter upon this great theatre of speculation and gambling. Churchmen and dissenters left their fierce disputes and forgot their wranglings upon church government in the deep and hazardous game they were playing for worldly treasures and for riches, which, if gained, were liable to disappear within an hour of their creation. Whigs and Tories buried their weapons of political warfare, discarded party animosities and mingled together in kind and friendly intercourse, each exulting as their stocks advanced in price and grumbling when fortune frowned upon them. Lawyers, physicians, merchants and traveling men forsook their employment, neglected their business, disregarded their engagements to whirl along in the stream, to be at last engulfed in the wild sea of bankruptcy. Females mixed with the crowd, forgetting the station and employment which nature had fitted them to adorn, and dealt boldly and extensively and, like those by whom they were surrounded, rose from poverty to wealth, and from that were thrown down to beggary and want, and all in one short week and perhaps before the evening which terminated the first day of their speculation. Ladies of high rank, regardless of every appearance of dignity and blinded by the prevailing infatuation, drove to the shops of their milliners and haberdashers and there met their stockbrokers, whom they regularly employed and through whom extensive sales were daily negotiated. In the midst of the excitement all distinction of party and religion and circumstances and character were swallowed up."

But it was left for our own country to surpass it all about thirty-seven years ago. We have the highest mountains and the greatest cataracts and the longest rivers, and of course we had to have the largest swindle. One would have thought that the nation had seen enough in that direction during the morous multicaulis excitement, when almost every man had a bunch of crawling silkworms in his house, out of which he expected to make a fortune. But all this excitement was as nothing compared with what took place in 1864, when a man near Titusville, Penn., digging a well, struck oil. Twelve hundred oil companies call for a billion of stock. Prominent members of churches, as soon as a certain amount of stock was assigned them, saw it was their privilege to become presidents or secretaries or members of the board of direction. Some of these companies never had a foot of ground, never expected to have. Their entire equipment was a map of a region where oil might be and two vials of grease, crude and clarified. People rushed down from all parts of the country by the first train and put their hard earnings in the gulf.

A young man came down from the oil region of Pennsylvania utterly demented, having sold his farm at a fabulous price because it was supposed there might be oil there—coming to a hotel in Philadelphia at the time I was living there, throwing a $5000 check to pay for his noonday meal and saying he did not care anything about the change! Then he stepped back to the gas burner to light his cigar with a thousand dollar note. Utterly insane!

The good Christian people said, "This company must be all right, because Elder So-and-so is president of it, and Elder So-and-so is secretary of it, and then there are three or four highly respected professing Christians in the board of directors." They did not know that when a professed Christian goes into stock gambling he lies like sin. But alas for the country! It became a tragedy, and a thousand million dollars were swamped. There are families to-day sitting in the shadow of destitution who but for that great national outrage would have had their cottages and their homesteads. I hold up before the young men these four great stock gambling schemes that they may see to what length men will go smitten of this passion, and I want to show them how all the best interests of society are against it and God is against it and will condemn it for time and condemn it for eternity. I do not dwell upon the frenzied speculations in Wall Street last month. You have enough remembrance of that financial horror. I only want you to know that it was in a procession of monetary frenzies, some of which have passed and others are to come.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JUNE 23.

Subject: A New Heaven and a New Earth. Rev. xxi., 1-7, 22-27—Golden Text, Rev. xxi., 7—Memory Verses, 3, 4, 27—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

1. "A new heaven," etc. Compare Isa. 65: 17-19; 2 Pet. 3: 13. These words express the greatness and the glorious character of the change that takes place in both the abode and the state of the redeemed. "No more sea." The absence of the sea is understood by some to denote symbolically the absence of all change, commotion or trouble of any sort. Others take the words literally.

2. "New Jerusalem." An ideal city, presented under figures that represent perfection—the perfection of purity, beauty and joy. This new Jerusalem is a symbol of the church of God in its new and perfect state. See chap. 19: 7-9. "Prepared." God's people are "prepared" in a twofold sense. 1. They have "made themselves ready." 2. The Lord Himself—the heavenly Bridegroom hath prepared them. Read Isa. 61: 10. "Adorned." The church is adorned in the glorious apparel of perfect righteousness.

3. "Tabernacle—with men." This is an expression showing God's "intimate and perpetual communion" with men. It is a figure from the conception of Jehovah as a resident in the old Jewish tabernacle. "Dwell with them." God in the most especial manner dwells with His followers, diffusing His light and life everywhere.

4. "Wipe away all tears." All the effects of former trouble shall be done away; they have been often before in tears, by reason of sin, of affliction, of the calamities of the church; but now all tears shall be wiped away; no signs, nor remembrance of former sorrows shall remain, any further than to make their present happiness the greater. "No more death." This is ample proof that this whole description belongs to eternity and not to time. But death cannot be destroyed by there being simply no further death; in order to its destruction there must be a resurrection. "Passed away." All the mournful scenes which were on earth so familiar to their eyes have passed away to return no more.

5. "Upon the throne." See chap. 4: 2. "All things new." As the creation of the world, at the beginning, was the work of God alone, so is this new creation. "Write." The apostle seems to have ceased writing, being overcome with ecstacy and the voice of Him that spoke. "True and faithful." This includes all that had been revealed to John. Truth refers to the promise of the wonderful changes that were to be made; faithfulness to the fulfilment of those promises.

6. "He said." Christ is the speaker. "It is done." The great work of man's redemption is accomplished. The righteous are gathered into the new Jerusalem, and the wicked cast into the lake of fire. The apostle is carried forward in vision to the end of all things, and looks back upon the prophecies of this book as already accomplished. "Beginning—end." Christ here shows that He is the cause and end of all things. Isa. 44: 6. We often begin what we can never finish, but Christ is able to finish what He has undertaken. "That is athirst." Hunger and thirst are the strongest of bodily appetites, and are frequently used to represent the strong desires of the soul after God. The intense longing after salvation and eternal life is an evidence of their reality; for God Himself has wrought within us these desires, and He stands pledged to satisfy them. "Fountain," etc. Representing the religion of the Bible. The supply is exhaustless. Here is an unfailing fulness of love, joy, peace and spiritual strength—a full salvation. The water from a fountain springs up and flows over, and so salvation in the soul gushes out in the life through our words and actions, and flows over on those around us. "Freely." It is for all who thirst; it is "without money and without price." Isa. 55: 1; John 4: 14.

7. "He that overcometh." He that successfully resists the temptations of the world, the flesh and the devil, and continues steadfast in the belief and practice of the truth to the end. "Inherit all things." Here, he had no inheritance; there, he shall inherit the kingdom of heaven and have every possible degree of blessedness. Matt. 19: 29; 1 Pet. 1: 4. "The whole creation shall be open to the enjoyment of the saints." "His God." The fountain of all blessing; the giver of every good and perfect gift. His God—to sustain and strengthen, to deliver in times of trouble and to bring to heaven at last. "My Son." And if a Son then an heir, an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ. See Rom. 8: 17. But these exalted privileges are only for those who are overcomers.

22. "And I saw." John is carried away by the Spirit into a great and high mountain (v. 10) where he is shown the holy Jerusalem. Compare Ezek. 40: 2. This city was a symbol of the church in glory. It was a solid cube, symbolizing completeness and perfection. Twelve is the symbol of God's people, and there were twelve gates, on which were written the names of the twelve tribes, showing that all of God's true followers have a share in the city. Gold and precious stones are used to represent the beauty, excellence and glory of this heavenly city—the church of Christ. Vs. 18-21. "No temple therein." The church in glory needs no temple especially consecrated to the worship of God.

23. "No need of the sun." For the presence of God and the Lamb make one eternal day. Heaven is the inheritance of the saints in light. The whole city seemed to appear to John "like a luminous object, sending out rays on every side."

24. "The nations." There are inhabitants in heaven from all the nations of the earth. "Which are saved." No one will ever enter heaven who was not saved on earth. "In the light." Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face. "The kings." Some of the kings of the earth will be saved. "Bring their glory," etc. Everything desirable, excellent and glorious, is perpetuated and perfected in heaven. V. 26.

25. "Shall not be shut." The doors of the Christian church on earth are ever open to receive sinners who are ready to forsake their wickedness and turn to Christ; and the gates of the new Jerusalem are never shut, and those that are sanctified will ever have an abundant entrance.

27. "In no wise enter," etc. Heaven is a holy place, and only holy people can enter. While the gates are always open they are guarded. The angels who stand at the gates not only welcome those who have a right to enter, but they keep away all intruders. Nothing abominable shall be allowed to enter there. "Which are written." Those enter whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life; who are renewed, justified, sanctified and thus fitted to be glorified.

The English tongue seems to have the advantage to-day. A hundred years ago English was a barbarous sound to most of the inhabitants of the globe. In 1800 there were only twenty millions who heard that drum beat which Daniel Webster spoke of later as rolling around the world. To-day there is more warning of supremacy often in the English voice than in the English trumpet.

THE Peoples Savings Bank is the title of the banking corporation organized in Clanton last week by Wm. E. Holloway and G. G. Miles, of Montgomery, with a capital stock of $50,000. When such men as Judge Adams, W. I. Mullins, E. M. Pinckard, Tipton Mullins, C. J. Stewart, W. T. Callen, and in fact nearly all our prominent citizens, take stock in the concern and are interesting themselves in its establishment, it goes without saying that the Peoples Savings Bank of Chilton county has a successful future before it. It will be of great benefit to the entire county and should be heartily supported.

The statement in the press news that a foot of snow fell in Colorado last Friday night, looks as if winter is giving a continuous performance in that region.—Advertiser.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

The sub-committee of the suffrage committee of the Alabama Constitutional Convention has finally agreed, or rather disagreed, upon its report to the full committee.

The suffrage plan to be suggested is fashioned largely after the North Carolina plan. It will provide the following qualifications for electors:

Educational—Ability to read and write.

Poll Tax—One dollar and fifty cents to be paid by January 1 preceeding election.

Property—After 1903 taxes on $300 of property.

Grandfather Clause—Soldiers who fought in war of 1812 and Civil war, or their decendants.

The sessions of the sub-committee have been executive, and the full report can not be obtained, but the above outline covers the main issue. The sub- committee has not been unanimous in reaching this conclusion, and it is reported that General Oates, Frank S. White and Gregory L. Smith from a minority, dissenting on three propositions, the most important of which is the clause permitting descendants of soldiers to vote.

The sub-committee reported to the full committee this afternoon, and it is expected that the full committee will be ready to report to the convention by Thursday or Friday. It is believed that the full committee will adopt the report of the sub-committee, but it will have to overcome the opposition Messrs. Oates and White to accomplish this. General Oates has publicly stated that he will fight the "descendants" proposition on the floor of the convention.

The sub-committee has had much difficulty in reaching conclusions. The committee has received information from several states recently restricting the suffrage, and the views of many of the ablest men of the country have been obstained. It is understood that Senator Ben Tillman of South Carolina, gave the committee a "warm number," taking strong position against the grandfather clause.

President Knox, it is understood, sent a letter to the committee setting forth his views, which are said to be practically the same as agreed upon by the committee. The committee refuses to make public any of the correspondence received.

The entire convention is awaiting the report of the committee with much interest.

The committee on State and county boundaries met and decided to recommend that the size of counties be fixed at 500 square miles. No new county can be formed of less size and no old county can be reduced to less size.

The committee is not unanimous on this proposition and a minority report will be made recomending that the size of counties remain as at present, that is, 600 square miles. Each new county will have to have a population sufficient to entitle it to one representative. Under the present apportionment this would be about 19,000.

The committee will also recommend that to remove a county seat a two-thirds vote of the qualified electors will be necessary. This committee has under consideration the Shelby County matter, and has practically decided to recommend that the act removing the courthouse from Columbiana to Caleca be annulled for fraud in its passage and that the question of removal be left to a vote of the people.

The committee on legislative department met tonight and have practically completed their work. The chief change in the present constitution will be the addition of two sections, one forbidding trusts and the other to prohibit the legislature expending in any one year more money than is raised by taxation.

At a meeting Tuesday night of the committee on municipal corporation a delegation from Attalla appeared before the committee to urge that Attalla be allowed to levy an extra tax not exceeding one-half per cent to pay its bonded indebtedness. There is a judgment against the city of over $85,000, which represents principal and interests on some of its defaulted bonds. The bondholders have agreed to take $25 000 of three per cent bonds in settlement and it is to pay the principal and interest on those bonds that the extra tax is desired. No action was taken by the committee.

The committee on preamble has practically completed its work and will be ready to report to-day.—Age-Herald.

TEETHINA was first used by Dr. Charles J. Moffett, a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pa., in his extensive and successful treatment in Georgia in overcoming the troubles incident to teething and hot summers. TEETHINA (Teething Powders) counteracts the effect of hot weather and keeps the digestive organs in a healthy condition, and has saved the lives of thousands of children in the doctor's native state, where physicians prescribe and all mothers give it, and it is criminal in mothers of our section to allow their babes and little children to suffer and perhaps die when relief can be so easily obtained by giving TEETHINA. It costs only 25 cents at druggists; or mail 25 cents to C. J. Moffett, M. D., St. Louis, Mo.

The Old Home Paper.

Noting the fact that many country bred men in the large cities take the local paper in their old home, the Philadelphia Record says: "The head of a large Market street wholesale business house, a man now advanced in years, has been a regular subscriber to one of the Bucks county papers for 50 years. 'He wouldn't give it up for anything,' said this man's son. 'He gets more real enjoyment from it than from anything he reads. A daily edition has been started within the last ten years, but he doesn't want that. He only gets the weekly edition, which prints gossip of a personal nature from the various towns throughout the county. He will pore over this by the hour, and his comments on the various items of news are often amusing. Scarcely a name is mentioned that he doesn't say, "Why, I used to go to school with his father," or "I once licked his Uncle Jim for tying my clothes up when we used to go swimming in the Neshaminy."'"

A WORTHY SUCCESSOR.
"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucuous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "SNUFFLES" the GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

This will undoubtedly be an achievement in journalism second to none in the country and certainly an enterprise worthy of patronage by the citizens throughout the State everwhere. We would advise interested readers to get your names on the list in time to begin at the opening. WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES

THE RECENT ACTIONS OF OUR NATION'S LAWMAKERS.

OUR CORRESPONDENT'S WEEKLY LETTER.

Mrs. McKinley Improving — Loomis is Upheld—China and the Chinese—Philippine Census — Chandler to Lodge — Platt to Quit.

The hope that Mrs. McKinley will recover is now stronger than at any time since the inception of her illness. Her improvement so far has been steady and constant, but she is not entirely out of danger.

A dispatch from Caracas, Venezuela, says: "Local newspapers have published articles to the effect that Charge D'Affaires W. W. Russell, of the American Legation, has been intrusted to notify the Venzuelan government that the United States had severely reproved Minister Loomis for his conduct regarding the various questions pending between the two countries." Washington advises say: "Instead of reproving Mr. Loomis, the state department has approved all his acts. He acted under instructions while in Venezuela and carried out those instructions, and no evidence had been discovered that he deviated from them in a single instance."

The Chinese in the United States are preparing for an organized fight to obtain the absolute repeal of the Geary exclusion act at the coming session of Congress. The movement was started early in the week and it is expected to spread rapidly to other cities having large Chinese populations. A powerful organization has been effected among the Chinese merchants. Within two weeks the Chinese will be asked to sign a carefully prepared memorial to the United States government asking that the exclusion act be repealed. The memorial will protest in the strongest possible terms against having the act extended for twenty years from the date of its expiration in 1902. It will be forwarded to the government, along with similar memorials prepared in other cities, through Wu Ting Fang. An effort will also be made to obtain the support of thousands of Americans whom the Chinese believe are opposed to the exclusion act.

Former Senator Chandler, of New Hampshire, has sent a check for $100 to Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, thereby making good the reward he offered some years ago to the person who placed in the financial plank of the republican platform in 1896, after the reference to international bimetalism the words, "Which we pledge ourselves to promote."

There have been many claimants for the reward, but in searching the original draft of the platform, Mr. Chandler found the words interlined in Mr. Lodge's handwriting.

Chandler's letter says: "All wise men know that McKinley and Hobart would not have been elected if the platform had not, while declaring opposition to the free coinage of silver, except as the result of an international agreement, also declared that the republican party favored such an international agreement if it could be secured. If McKinley and Hobart had not been elected in 1896, Mr. McKinley would not have been re-elected in 1900. Therefore, those six words, 'which we pledge ourselves to promote,' were of priceless value, and I trust that when all the facts are known my humble offering of $100 will be supplemented by many generous donations."

Special Commissioner Rockhill has cabled the state department that four of the powers have not accepted the 450,000,000 taels as the lump to be demanded of China—Russia, Germany, France and Japan. Diplomats insist there is no necessity for formal acceptance by the powers by the limit of 450,000,000 taels $337,000,000. They point out that each power presented its claim for damages; that these were lumped together and that the aggregate was the limit of the demand accepted by the Chinese envoys. These gentlemen express doubt that the American proposal for the reference of the indemnity question to the Hague would be adopted.

Manila papers received at the war department contain articles of more or less importance concerning that city and the Philippines. The census gives the population of Manila at 244,932, divided as follows: Filipinos, 181,861; Chinese, 51,567; Americans, 4,562; Spaniards, 2,482; other nationalities, 960. The figures do not include men belonging to the United States army.

SPURNS WANAMAKER OFFER

Franchises Worth $2,500,000 Given Away by the Mayor of Philadelphia.

CONTEST IN THE COURTS LIKELY

Mayor Ashbridge Signs the Street Railway Ordinances and Ignores John Wanamaker's Proffer of Millions For Them — He Makes No Explanation of His Action—Causes Profound Sensation

Philadelphia, Penn.—Mayor Ashbridge has signed the fourteen ordinances passed by the City Council granting franchises to certain corporations for city railways, surface, elevated, and underground. These were the ordinances made possible by the bills recently rushed through the Pennsylvania Legislature at the instance of the Quay machine. No payment of any kind to the city is provided for in the bills. As a result, injunction proceedings restraining the operation of the franchises are now contemplated.

Mayor Ashbridge's action in refusing to open John Wanamaker's letter, which was left at his house, and throwing away the letter handed him at the dedication of the Mint, has created a profound sensation. The Mayor signed the ordinances in opposition to public sentiment, and in the face of a protest by Mr. Wanamaker, who had written to him offering to give $2,500,000 for the franchises.

Mr. Wanamaker's letter, after referring to the various franchises and disclaiming any interest in street railways and expressing the opinion that the rights about to be given away are extremely valuable, continued:

"For the power, rights and franchises, granted and intended to be secured by the fourteen ordinances referred to I will give to the city of Philadelphia the sum of $2,500,000, and as a guarantee of good faith in the matter I have this day deposited with the Real Estate Trust Company on account of this proposition ten per cent., or $250,000.

"My offer of $2,500,000 is made not because I conceive that sum to be a measure of the value of the franchises to be granted by these ordinances, for I believe them to be much more valuable, but merely as an indication to Your Honor in concrete form of the magnitude of the gift conferred upon private citizens without return to the people. It seems to me that to give away such franchises for nothing, when others stand ready to pay millions for the same right, is little short of public plunder."

Mr. Wanamaker's letter was handed to Mayor Ashbridge while the latter was attending the ceremonies of the dedication of the new Mint. A clerk of Wanamaker's thrust it in his hand. The Mayor recognized the handwriting of Mr. Wanamaker, and threw the letter after the messenger, who was rapidly walking away. A newspaper man picked it up. Another copy of the letter was waiting the Mayor at his house.

Mayor Ashbridge, Senators Quay and Penrose and nearly all the Philadelphia Congressmen are said to be interested in the proposed roads. Mr. Wanamaker is the bitter personal and political enemy of the Mayor.

THE FUTURE OF THE SOUTH

It is to Become a Great Manufacturing Region of the Union.

SOUTHERNERS IN PHILADELPHIA

Speeches Delivered Before the Delegates to the Industrial Convention — The South Has Everything Except Population and Capital—Statistics to Prove Its Illimitable Resources.

Philadelphia, Penn.—Delegates to the Southern Industrial Convention were welcomed by Governor W. A. Stone, of Pennsylvania, Mayor Ashbridge, of Philadelphia, and representatives of various trade bodies. Governor Stone said that Pennsylvania was always glad to welcome any representatives of the Southern States.

"Every one recognizes," he said, "that the South to-day is the greatest missionary field for commerce in the world. We recognize that the South produces two-thirds of all the cotton of the world and makes into finished product very little of it. This should not be continued. The South's manufacturing capacity should be developed, and she would then make cotton goods for the world."

Mayor Ashbridge assured the delegates to the city that Philadelphia had much which they could use, and that to increase the commerce between this city and the South would be mutually beneficial.

President H. H. Hargrove, of the Southern Industrial Association, responding, said the South's capacity to produce raw material was almost beyond measurement. He added:

"The Southern States contain one-fourth of the area of the Union, and have practically as much in agricultural products as all the rest of the country combined. This section has thirty-three per cent. of the population of the United States, raises all of its cotton and cottonseed, and American rice and eighty per cent. of its tobacco, contains thirty-five per cent. of its timber resources, thirty per cent. of its coal area, twenty per cent. of its coal production, produces seventeen and a half per cent. of its iron and furnishes eighty per cent. of American pig iron exported, produces the cheapest pig iron and coal in the world, is the third largest cane sugar producing section of the world, producing in 1900 twelve per cent. of the world's cane sugar; contains more coast and river frontage than all the other States, and has thirty per cent. of its railroad mileage, and affords the cheapest lumber building material, lands, cotton, coal and oil and living in the United States.

"To achieve the fullest wealth which the Southern States are capable of producing, I estimate that within five years there will be needed 5,000,000 additional population and $500,000,000 additional capital for manufacturing, mineral, agricultural and forest development and railroad building."

In an address on "Popular Education, the Power of Industrial Progress," Robert C. Ogden, President of the Southern Educational Conference, said: "Intelligence has a cost value, and the intimate relation between business and education places the question of universal Southern education within the power of Southern business men. It is clear that practical knowledge increases production, creates more wealth, increases consumption and creates more wants. Encourage private beneficence to supplement the action of the State. The South has an educational mission. Will it rise to the opportunity?"

Hoke Smith spoke on "The Resources of the South." He said that the successful cultivation of one crop would not bring success to a region. To produce raw materials alone is not sufficient. It is necessary to prepare them for manufacturers' use as well as to produce them. The South offers, he said, opportunity of every variety of cultivation—corn, wheat, rye, potatoes, tobacco, rice and fruits of all kinds. He said, it was not a fact that the South had sent a challenge to the cotton spinners of New England that had been a notice to them that they cannot continue to accumulate millions by shipping Southern lint cotton 1600 miles and manufacturing it into cotton to be shipped South again. He did not believe the destiny of the South lay in manufacturing cotton cloth in competition with New England. He opposed struggles between different parts of the country. The challenge of the South was to the world that she would manufacture her own cotton cloth and ship it to all parts of the world.

All the people, he said, must be free and educated to insure progress. He spoke of the establishment of schools both for manual and mental training and said that the Government could very easily supply half of the $12,000,000 irregularly collected from the South for a great technological college. He added:

"I wish the South to grow financially, that schools, colleges and churches may be opened to every child, that the great mass of people may be strengthened and blessed. I wish the South to do its full part, commercially, in the Union, that our nation may be more powerful in the family of nations, not for more splendor and glory, but that we as a nation may the more readily reach our great destiny, the upbuilding of the human race; that the Stars and Stripes may float upon every sea, carrying freedom and happiness to those it may visit—the symbol of a prosperous people, actuated by a brotherly love."

Tennessee Fruit Outlook Bright.

Fruitgrowers in Tennessee a few weeks ago were very much discouraged on account of weather conditions, but this feeling has been changed to enthusiasm at the prospects. They say that the peach crop this year will exceed anything ever experienced in the State.

A tornado at Adrien, Minn., demolished eight buildings and injured six persons, three of whom sustained broken limbs. Other towns suffered some damage from the wind, but all are of minor importance.

GUARDING THE PRESIDENT.

Locomotive Sentinels Which Precede and Follow the Train.

When the President travels the percentage of possibility of accident is reduced to a minimum in the selection of cars for the train. New coaches, which have just left the shops, are preferred. Axles, wheels, springs, journals, brakes, couplings—in fact, all of the important factors in the make-up of a train—are carefully examined and tested before being allowed to depart with their precious human freight. The engine selected is the best in the service and is run by the most reliable engineer in each division of the road, the man upon whom the company can rely for the exercise of caution and of the best judgment in time of emergency. In no case, however, is he allowed to bear alone the responsibilities of his important position. On the opposite side of the cab sits a man less grimy, perhaps, and without overalls. He is the road foreman of the division. Neither the engineer nor the road foreman speaks to the other as the train rolls swiftly along. Their eyes are on the long line of steel rails that stretches away into the distance, but they are thinking of the smooth-faced, dark-eyed man who is in the rear car, smiling and conversing with his friends, and in whom all the greatness of the republic is personified. They feel their heavy responsibility, and they give a sigh of relief when the end of their division is reached.

As the train glides besides rivers, through valleys and over mountains, new faces appear. Quiet men, who seem to know no one except the conductors and other railway employes, slip into some vacant seat in a sleeping car, or sit and smoke in the combination car just behind the engine. They chat with each other, occasionally glancing at their watches, and are always alert. They are the division superintendents, masters of transportation or men holding other responsible positions.

"Suppose," I remarked to one of these officials, when we were together on a President's train, says Henry Litchfield West, "that some evil disposed person should displace a rail for the purpose of killing the President?"

"Any attempt to wreck this train, with design upon the life of the President," was the emphatic reply, "would have to be carried into execution in less than five minutes. Just before we left the last station, an engine, with two men in the cab, slipped out upon the main track, and is now just ahead of the President's train. If anybody has displaced a rail, or set fire to a bridge, or opened a switch, the engine ahead will feel the blow. It is our picket line. Between the passing of that engine over the track and the coming of the President's train there is not time enough for any one to displace a rail."

"The track is clear, of course?"

"The track is not only clear at the present time, but it has been for the past twelve hours. Not a wheel of a freight train has turned all day."

The pilot engine ahead is on the lookout for danger. Three miles behind the President's train is another engine, following steadily so as to be available in case of any mishap.

"And yet," I remark, during a lull in the conversation, "something may happen that you cannot foresee?" The answer comes from the strong-visaged man over in the corner. He is the master of transportation of the road.

"Oh, yes," he says, with composure, "something may happen, but after we have reduced the chances of that 'something' to a minimum, we can only trust in Providence."—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

Chapel of the Pyx.

The ancient Chapel of the Pyx at Westminster is to be thrown open to the public. This is one of the oldest and most interesting parts of the Abbey, the greater part of the fabric belonging to the reign of Edward the Confessor. It was used in early Norman times as a royal treasury, and a robbery from the chapel in the reign of Edward I. of treasure valued at £100,000, created a great deal of stir. Later it was used as a record chamber for the treasury, and more recently as a receptacle for the apparatus necessary for the trial of the Pyx—the standardizing of the coin of the realm. The documents formerly deposited in the Pyx chapel have been removed and henceforth the public will have the privilege of penetrating the recesses of this mysterious chamber.—Newcastle (Eng.) Chronicle.

She is one-fourth larger than the Oceanic, hitherto the biggest ship.—New York Journal.

French Subjects of Great Britain.

At a recent sitting of the Cour Royale of the Isle of Alderney, the oath of allegiance to his majesty the king was administered to the judge, jurats, king's procurator and other officials with due and fitting ceremony, says a London newspaper. Dr. Edward Everett Hale tells how an error crept into the translation of Lord's Prayer into the Delaware tongue. The English translation says: "Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be thy name." An assistant, an Indian who knew English, "What is 'hallow' in Delaware?" asked the translator. The Indian thought he said "hallow," and gave the equivalent. Therefore the Delaware version of the Lord's Prayer reads this day: "Our Father, Who art in Heaven, hollowed be thy name."

Austria and Mexico have shaken hands and made up, diplomatically speaking, after a quarrel dating from the time of Prince Maximilian, younger brother of Francis Joseph I. The prince, [illegible] to Napoleon III., of France, accepted the crown of Mexico in 1864, supported by French troops, had a stormy career as emperor of the unwilling empire. The twin tragedies of the insanity of Carlotta, and the execution of Maximilian, left a feeling of resentment against Mexico in the courts of both Austria and Belgium. It has often awkward, at neutral capitals, when diplomats representing these three met, or, rather, refused to meet. All is forgotten, and ministers will be exchanged between the capitals.

It will be the reflection that one did not do his best; that he did not make of life what he ought to have made of it. When the heart takes fire with regret, you will need no other burning. When the reproachful memory saddens, you will need no other sorrow. It will be enough.—Rev. Dr. D. M. Hodge.

Napoleon's Human Checkers.

Lord Rosebery's fascinating "Napoleon: The Last Phase" furnishes the text for an editorial in the Century Magazine.

A part of Napoleon's misunderstanding of human nature was his misunderstanding of the national spirit—as professor Sloane expresses it, "his contempt for nationality." On this subject there is an interesting passage in Lord Rosebery's book.

"Whom God wishes to destroy, says the adage, he first deprives of sanity. And so we see Napoleon, with incredible self-delusion, want of insight, or both, preparing his own destruction by dealing with men as if they were checkers, and moving them about the board according to his own momentary whim, without a thought of their passions or character of traditions, in a word, by ignoring human nature.

All this "cutting and carving" Napoleon did without the slightest regard for "the exasperation of the transferred souls." Moreover, by his mania for moving boundaries and shifting realms, he created a feeling of impermanence and insecurity. "He never seems to have given a thought to the storm of studying hatred, rancor, and revenge that was chafing and raging below."

Lord Rosebery thinks it "only fair to add" that the congress of his enemies at Vienna proceeded, with flattering imitation, on the same principles as to "cutting and carving."

Looking out upon the world as it now is, one cannot help asking, with a shudder, whether, aside from all questions of original right and wrong, the mistake of Napoleon, repeated in some measure by the Allies, is one altogether avoided in our time by the very nations that believe themselves the most civilized, the most enlightened, the most free. Answer: China, the Philippines, and South Africa!

The Limit of Power.

In the administration of President Harrison Senator Clark of Wyoming, then a practicing lawyer in the Territory, as it was in those days, was appointed a judge of the territorial court. He was not certain about accepting the position, and he went over to have a talk with Judge Corn, the Democratic incumbent.

"Hello, Clark," said the judge. "Have you come over to be sworn in?"

"No," said Clark. "I have not yet made up my mind to take the place."

"Oh, take it by all manner of means," said Judge Corn. "It is a pleasant job, and I think you will like it."

"But," said Clark, "I have a good many private matters to attend to, and I cannot accept for some time yet, anyway. If I conclude to take the place I will let you know."

"All right," said Judge Corn. "Come over and I will swear you in, but," he added, with a laugh, "while I can swear you in all creation cannot qualify you."—Washington Post.

Wonderful Discoveries in Egypt.

A professor of University college, London, spent the past winter in Egypt, exploring royal tombs, and he reports having discovered many things of interest and value. The most important, perhaps, are many fragments of ivory and stone, bearing inscriptions that will aid in tracing the development of civilization during the four hundred years when the only writing was in rude pictures, down to the time when hieroglyphics were in common use. He also found the toilet articles of Menes, the founder of monarchy, things that were made more than 6500 years ago, and the tomb of Zer, successor to Menes, the fore-arm of the queen, which had been broken off by some former plunderer, and on it four magnificent jeweled bracelets.

From Sod House to Governor.

Ezra Perin Savage, who will soon become governor of Nebraska and live in the beautiful executive mansion at Lincoln, lived in a sod house in 1880. He was born in Connorsville, Ind., in 1842, and was left at the age of 10 years the sole support of his widowed mother and the family of little brothers and sisters. Young Savage worked hard on farms and in other occupations, meanwhile managing to pass through high school and college. He studied law, removed to Iowa, made some money in land speculation, and then removed to Nebraska. He was the first mayor of South Omaha, laid out the town of Sargent, and grew rich when the railroad was built through the town. Among his other good records is one he won as a soldier and scout for Grant and Sherman during the civil war.

An old farmer in Bruichladdich, Islay, N. B., once went to have a troublesome tooth extracted. Said the dentist, after looking at the offending molar, "It is a very ugly one. I would advise you to have it out by the painless system. It is only a shilling extra." He showed the farmer the apparatus for administering gas, remarking that it would cause him to fall asleep for a minute, and before he awoke the tooth would be out. After a slight resistance the sufferer consented, proceeding to open his purse. "Oh, never mind paying just now!" said the dentist, kindly. "Hoots!" answered the cautious old Scot. "WHEN PRESSING YOUR SUIT."

When pressing your suit with the favorite lady,—
The girl that you think you desire for a wife—
Choose a place that is quiet, secluded and shady;
For that's an important transaction in life.
Remember, though she may be charming and pretty,
Of face most enchanting, of figure most neat,
Should she not be well trained it would be a great pity
That you and your lady-love ever should meet.

In choosing a wife, my dear fellow, the best trick
Is, first, to consider her womanly gifts,
Her household acquirements—attainments domestic—
The sensible mind that all women uplifts.
Does she know how to cook? Is she able and active?
Does she use LION COFFEE—the purest of brands?
If so, then she surely will make home attractive,
And pleasant for you with her own loving hands.

LION COFFEE, you know, has no coating or glazing,
In millions of homes is its purity known;
Consumers are always its quality praising—
A flavor and fragrance entirely its own.

Prismatic Colors.

Mrs. Opie, the widow of the great portrait painter, whom some one has called the "inspired peasant," never, even in her old age, lost her love of bright colors. A little girl, Emma Martin, afterward known in literature as Emma Marshall, visited her one day and experienced a rare pleasure. She says:

On a screen in her drawing room were hung a number of prisms, which were suspended from chandeliers before the bell shaped globes came into fashion. I sat on a stool at my mother's feet, wondering what those long bits of glass could mean. Presently the brilliant rays of the western sunshine filled the room.

"Now," said Mrs. Opie, "thou mayst run over to that screen and give it a shake."

I did as I was bidden. "Be gentle," said my mother in a warning voice, but I gave the screen a vigorous shake.

Emerald, ruby and violet rays danced on the walls and ceiling and delighted me so intensely that I kept repeating the process; then my mother, afraid of mischief resulting, came and drew me back to her side. Mrs. Opie looked at me and said:

"If thou lovest bright colors, thee will never see anything more beautiful than the rainbow God sets in the sky."

Could Not Report Golf.

When the amateur golf championship was played at Wheaton in 1897 there was but one Chicago newspaper man who had the remotest conception of what the game was. Accordingly, the newspapers, with the exception of the Chicago Tribune, agreed to syndicate the work and put it all in this one man's hands. The Tribune refused to enter the combination and depended upon the exertions of a member of its own staff. But the Tribune reporter speedily realized his helplessness and appealed to his brother of the syndicate for aid. The latter obligingly handed over his copy, and the Tribune man set to work to make a few minor changes so that its kinship to the original should not be too apparent. Later in the evening he met his generous benefactor and told him of the changes he had made.

"In particular, the account of the play at the sixth hole between Forgan and Douglas. You said that 'Forgan rimmed the cup for a half.' Well, you know, old chap, that Forgan is a banker down town and a big man, while Douglas is just one of those Scotchmen. It seemed to me rather cheap to have Forgan doing that sort of thing for a half, so I just made it read that 'Forgan rimmed the cup with Douglas for a hundred.'"—Washington Capital.

Ants That Fight Spiders.

Few more wonderful adaptations are seen in the whole round of nature than the webs spiders spin to entrap the wary ant. They are not high hung, lacy affairs, caressing every breeze, but low set, silken tubes stretched in the grass, the crevices of rock or about tree roots. Ants of every size creep heedlessly into them. The spiders eat them with relish, but occasionally a very little spider and a very big ant engage in a duel to the death. If the spider can bite, the ant can sting, and does it with a right good will. The spider does not try to get rid of such an ant as he does of a wasp or bee too strong to be safely attacked. Such an insect, which threatens destruction to the web, is often cut out of it by the web builders. The entangling cables are not loosed, but the web rays neatly snipped in two, first those underneath and at the very last the highest filament. Often the letting go of such captive means destruction to half the nest. But some spiders are wiser than some people. They know not merely when they have enough, but when they have too much.

Something Which He Learned.

A soft answer has not only the effect of turning away wrath. It may serve to avenge an injury. Years ago the Rev. J. H. Jones was making a visit in Boston and attended a biweekly conference at Divinity hall. Just at that time he was out of sorts with the east, and his address reflected an acrid mood. Especially did he insist that "They didn't know everything down in Judea or even in Cambridge."

When he sat down, there was a momentary hush, and then the late Dean Everett slowly rose. He began in his usual soft and hesitating tone, "There are doubtless a great many things which Mr. Jones knows and we do not know, but there are also a few things which we know and he does not."

Then followed a pause, during which each man held his breath, for the dean was known to carry on his lips a dagger which sometimes found its unerring way to the hearts of men and things, but after due pause he continued gently:

"And chief among them is how glad we always are to see him."—Youth's Companion.

The Echo at Work.

When we had climbed to the top of the mountain, we observed an old man sitting on a rock with a pair of field-glasses in his hands. Every now and then he would look earnestly through them and then whoop continuously for a time with a vigor astonishing, considering his age. For a time we observed him from a respectful distance till finally, being naturally curious, I went up to him. "Why," I asked, "do you rubber that way and then yell so loud?"

He turned and eyed me calmly, with a dignity which could have been born of nothing but a great responsibility.

"If you talk to me," he said gravely, "you'll take my attention, and I'll lose my job. I, sir, am the echo at the Mountain House down yonder."

At this point it became necessary for him to howl again, and I retired much impressed.—Princeton Tiger.

There are a couple of European cows in Athens whose proprietors think, but they do business mostly with foreigners and with those who ape foreign manners. Your Athenian believes the goat to be the proper milk producing animal, and regards the cow in this country about the same as Americans do the bison. The milkman takes his animals around, jangling their bells and shouting "Gala!" he shouts, with a quick, jerky cry, with a "g" whose guttality is unattainable by adult Greeks and usually unperceived by them. When a customer comes to the door he strips the desired quantity into the offered receptacle before her eyes, selecting one of the goats paying no attention to the others. They understand the business as well as do the cud or resting on cool doorsteps.

When their master moves on they follow, more faithful than sheep.—Scribner's Magazine.

THE POULTRY DOCTOR

If you are interested in Poultry, by all means send 25 cents in Postage Stamps to the Associated Fanciers, 400 N. 3d St., Philadelphia, Penna., for their new book, on the diseases of poultry. Although comparatively small, it is so concise, terse and lucid as to be of great value to the fancier and the breeder of poultry it shows how to manage and rear fowls, how to detect their different ailments, and how to treat them by either allopathic or homeopathic remedies. It is from the pen of Mr. John E. Diehl, the well known American Poultry Association Judge one of the highest authorities on poultry.

To the Missionary Baptist Churches of Mulberry, Unity and Weogufka Associations within the bounds of Chilton County:

Brethren:—You are hereby requested to elect two delegates to meet with the Executive Committee of the Mulberry and Unity Associations at Macedonia Church, five miles east of Randolph, on Saturday, the 13th day of July, 1901, for the purpose of considering the question of organizing Chilton County Association, in accordance with a resolution passed at the last session of the Mulberry Association.

We submit a few reasons for this move:

1st. We have about 40 Baptist churches in Chilton County, and the organization of an Association in the county will be convenient and will unite our church in work for the Master in and around our homes.

Elect your delegates and let us consider the question, which will be referred back to the churches for their ratification.

TEETHINA was first used by Dr. Charles J. Moffett, a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pa., in his extensive and successful treatment in Georgia in overcoming the troubles incident to teething and hot summers. TEETHINA (Teething Powders) counteracts the effect of hot weather and keeps the digestive organs in a healthy condition, and has saved the lives of thousands of children in the doctor's native state, where physicians prescribe and all mothers give it, and it is criminal in mothers of our section to allow their babes and little children to suffer and perhaps die when relief can be so easily obtained by giving TEETHINA. It costs only 25 cents at druggists; or mail 25 cents to C. J. Moffett, M. D., St. Louis, Mo.

THE BANNER.

Published Weekly.

CLANTON, - - - ALABAMA.

A wealthy Frenchman has made arrangements by means of his will to offer inducements to tall men and women to marry. His purpose is to help posterity to a greater average height. This may satisfy the artistic sense, but the little fellows of the world have made a great deal of its history.

The tonnage of the Great Eastern was 10,300 below that of the Celtic which has just been launched at Belfast. It will be recalled that the Great Eastern failed as a money maker and was retired as being unwieldy. It was power that the former ship lacked. The latter has it in superabundance, and it is predicted she will be a success.

An inquisitive reporter recently took a census of a mile of Fifth avenue, New York City, where many very rich men dwell, and found just 15 children under the age of 12 years. There was an average of one child in three houses. Later the investigator turned his attention to the East Side tenement district, where he found 63 children in one house—more than four times the number found in the whole Fifth avenue mile.

The work of removing the little white schoolhouses from the Iowa hilltops is attracting more attention just now than any other educational movement of the new century, states the New England Farmer. Advanced educators of Iowa have come to the realization that the theory of a schoolhouse every two or three miles along the country roads is all wrong. The last legislature recognized the fact that some provision should be made for lessening the cost of maintaining so many schoolhouses, and passed laws making it possible to consolidate schools and to engage in the practice of transporting children from long distances to school at public expense.

Writing in Cassier's Magazine, Alton D. Adams shows that the time is ripe for the advent of a new system of urban and interurban transportation. The object sought in each change thus far appears to have been a reduction in operating expenses as well as an improvement in service. In the opinion of Mr. Adams electric vehicles embrace the necessary elements of the next improvement in street traction. There is no comparison, of course, in the matter of flexibility of operation and freedom from the street structures. It is only a question of comparative cost. Mr. Adams shows that for a given daily output of energy the station to charge storage batteries for electric vehicles need only have one-fourth the capacity in generating machinery that is necessary for the operation of a tram car system, and would require no battery plant whatever. After computing the comparative cost of maintenance and operation Mr. Adams finds an unbalanced advantage of transportation with electromobiles, a saving of about one-half of the entire first cost and also of one-half of the annual interest charges of present street car systems.

The increasing number of farms operated by tenants has been pointed out as a sign that the former owners were rapidly sinking into a state of tenancy through the foreclosure of mortgages. This has, however, been shown not to be the case by Mr. L. G. Powers, the chief statistician of the division of agriculture of the census bureau. According to the new census figures, the total number of farms in the United States has increased from 4,500,000 in 1890 to 5,700,000 in 1900, and those operated by tenants have increased between 40 and 45 percent, while those tilled by their owners have increased between 15 and 18 percent. Both classes have increased more rapidly than the agricultural population, which fact disproves the assertion that the owners are being degraded into tenants. Mr. Powers states that it does not indicate the degradation of the rural population, but an uplifting that has raised not less than 100,000 families from the position of wage-earners to that of lessees of small or large tracts of tillable land. When a wage-earner, he states, in a rural community gets a little capital ahead he often begins to look for a farm to rent and operate. Those owners of farms who have laid by a goodly-sized "nest-egg" are often willing to lease their lands and retire to the city to live on their income. The result is an increase in tenant farms, but it is in an economic improvement for all concerned. If the tenant be successful he may be able to buy the farm in a few years.

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

Further Report of Alabama's Constitutional Convention.

Twenty-Third Day.

Section Thirteen Finally Adopted—And Two More With It—Another Queer Petition.

Roll call showed 124 members present on the twenty-third day. The new business was as follows:

By Mr. Williams—To establish a whipping post.

By Mr. Pettus—To prevent and prohibit intermarriage of negroes and whites unto the third generation; penalty, three years in the penitentiary.

The convention refused to suspend the rules to allow Mr. Brooks to introduce an ordinance expressing the sense of the convention to be against woman suffrage.

By Mr. Cofer—A resolution to regulate the fees of circuit solicitors; that they be elected by the people for four years; their salary not to exceed $2,000 per annum.

Mr. Blackwell introduced a petition from a negro asking that the convention shall not discriminate against the negro. It said "slavery had been a blessing to his race." Mr. Greer moved that the petition be not recorded. Mr. Greer's motion was tabled by a vote of 81 to 18, and the petition was referred to the committee on suffrage.

A resolution extending the sympathy of the convention to Secretary Julian on the death of his brother William, was unanimously adopted.

By Mr. Greer—To fix the election of city officials on same day as election of state officials.

The convention then took up section thirteen of the article on executive, which relates to the passage of bills through the house and their veto by the governor, and it was adopted with amendments by a vote of 73 to 41.

Section 15, providing for succession to the office of governor in case of vacancy or disability, all along the line of state offices just as named in the code, the same as federal law relating to succession to the office of president, was adopted.

Section 16, relating to procedure when the governor is of unsound mind to be looked into by the Supreme Court was taken up.

The convention adjourned at 1 o'clock while considering this section.

Twenty-Fourth Day.

Six More Sections Adopted—More New Ordinances Presented—Press Gets the Cold Shoulder.

One hundred and forty-one delegates answered to roll call on this the twenty-fourth day. New ordinances proposed were:

By Mr. NeSmith—To make an address to the people setting out changes in the constitution and the reasons therefor.

By Mr. O'Neal—To prevent privilege tax on drummers.

By Mr. Greer—To extend a welcome to the press. This was defeated by a large vote.

By Mr. Whiteside—To deny the legislative right to levy a privilege tax.

The ordinance on executive was resumed. Section 16 was finally adopted so as to provide that whenever the governor shall be insane the supreme court may act in the matter and its judgment shall be final.

Section 17, providing for succession to the governor, was adopted.

Section 18, relating to the governor holding no other office, was adopted.

Section 19, stating the governor's command of state troops, was adopted.

Section 20, forbidding the appointment of members of the general assembly to office during their term of office, was adopted.

Section 21, prescribing eligibility to state officers, was adopted.

Section 22, relating to the seal was under consideration when the convention adjourned.

Twenty-Fifth Day.

The Convention "Crawfished" Twice—No Change in State Seal—Banking Laws Suggested.

There were 140 delegates in their seats today. Two reconsiderations were effected. The first grants to the Alabama Press Association the courtesy of the floor. The second tables section 20 of the article on executive, denying appointive offices to members of the general assembly.

The committee on banks and banking, reported section 14 of the present constitution, to which a section is added providing for the examination by some state officer of all banks and banking institutions and trust companies engaged in banking business in this state.

The state seal matter then came up and was tabled. It is left as at present.

The resolution by Mr. O'Neal instructing the legislature to increase the salary of the governor to $5,000 was reported favorably. President Knox took the floor for the first time and spoke for the resolution.

Adjourned.

Twenty-Sixth Day.

A Day of Discussion Only—Nothing Really Accomplished—Preamble Committee Reports.

There were 136 members present today and the session of the convention was a failure as a constitution making one, nothing but discussion being indulged in.

The committee on preamble submitted its report. It consists of 8 sections.

The question of the governor's salary was again discussed and finally left to the general assembly to raise to $5,000, "if" it can be done without increasing taxation.

While discussing section four of the ordinance on executive, the hour for adjournment arrived.

Twenty-Seventh Day.

The Article on Executive is Adopted—Committee on Local Legislation Has Made a Report.

One hundred and three delegates responded to roll call at the session of June 22. Hereafter the convention will hold two sessions daily—from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. and from 3 to 5 p. m. Only two new measures were proposed:

By Mr. Graham—That a special county tax be authorized to build school houses.

By Mr. Packer—To appoint a committee to prepare a memorial to the congress of the United States to have the fifteenth amendment repealed.

The committee on local legislation submitted its report. It favors a new article in the constitution, and its main feature is to prohibit local legislation by the general assembly, and authorize it to confer such powers upon local courts. It requires notice to be given of the intention to introduce local or special laws in the legislature, and provides that such laws be repealed on similar notice. The article contains six sections.

Consideration of the article on executive was then resumed and section 4 relating to state election returns was adopted.

Sections 23, 24 and 25 were adopted before dinner. Section 23 defines the duties of the secretary of state. Section 24 requires the state seal on grants and commissions. Section 25 provides succession in state offices below that of lieutenant governor.

The first afternoon session began at three o'clock, 97 present, and sections 28, 29 and 30 were adopted. They refer to the duties of the state officers and sheriffs and provides for impeachment and removal of the latter.

Twenty-Eighth Day.

More Resolutions—Municipal Corporations Committee Reports—Also Committee on Taxation.

The twenty-eighth day of the constitutional convention opened with 92 delegates in their seats.

Section 30 of the article on executive was reconsidered, and one of its features—making the sheriff ineligible to any office for a year after retiring from office—striken out.

The governor's salary again came up and it was decided to allow the general assembly to pay the executive a higher salary when it thinks proper.

Mr. Blackwell offered a new section that the governor shall fill vacancies in county office until the general election, but the matter, with an amendment, was tabled.

The committee on municipal corporations reported an ordinance. The material changes are that all bond issues must be submitted to the people except for improvements. The indebtedness of cities is limited to 7 per cent of assessed valuation. The cities of the state are to be classified and incorporated under general laws. All franchises to be limited to twenty years, and awarded to the highest bidder.

At the afternoon session, Gen. Sanford introduced an ordinance to prohibit the general assembly from authorizing lotteries or pool selling.

The committee on taxation made its report, and the convention considered its first section which calls for a tax in exact proportion to the value of property, and a poll tax of $1.50 for school purposes.

The African quagga is extinct, and several families of antelopes have been wiped out of existence. Zebras are scarce, giraffes are few in number, the rhinoceros and hippopotamus are passing from view, and the American bison, once roaming over the Western prairies in herds of thousands and tens of thousands, counts a few feeble folk as pitiful survivors. Before this century is half over big game will be almost unknown. It is deplorable that butchery on a gigantic scale has robbed forests and jungles, plains and valleys, mountains and meadows, to such an extent of the fauna so well worth study and preservation.

With Andrew Carnegie giving $22,500 as a prize to stimulate improvements in British steel-making, and Ironmaster William Garrett, of Cleveland, giving the foreign Iron and Steel Institute good advice as to holding their market, Americans cannot be held to be "hoggish" in their ambition for world-supremacy.

HAPPENINGS IN ALABAMA

HOW THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE ARE MAKING HISTORY.

NEWSY NOTES FROM ALL ITS SECTIONS

Industrial and Educational Matters—General Brandon Reappointed—Lost Her Eye—Hannis Taylor the Choice—Other Items.

THE EDUCATORS.

The Alabama Educational Association closed its session of 1901 at Montgomery Thursday, after electing the following officers: President, Jacob Forney, Tuskaloosa; first vice-president, D. P. Cristenberry, Greensboro; second vice-president, Mrs. C. L. Floyd, Montgomery; third vice-president, Miss Jessie Ruter, Birmingham; secretary, W. E. Stripling, Tallassee.

SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

A meeting was held by a large number of representative citizens Friday at the court house in Athens to hear Dr. S. A. Steel, late of Petersburg, Va., who is anxious and determined to begin the great movement of locating and establishing an industrial school for the white boys and girls of the South. The meeting resulted in having a committee of the leading men of the county appointed for the purpose of securing lands for the location of the school. The doctor says that he has already one hundred thousand dollars in sight to begin with and that he will have no trouble in getting what money is needed for the successful termination of the enterprise. A committee of prominent citizens will be named as trustees of the school, and the doctor will be made president.

THE NEW OFFICERS.

The board of control of the Southwest Alabama Agricultural School has elected the following trustees for the ensuing year: Prof. J. A. Lanier, principal; Profs. C. W. Vaughan, Duncan and Corey and Misses Ethel King, Sarah Bruner, Mary Sampey and Willie Cunningham. Miss Kate Jones will conduct the music department.

HER EYE GONE.

A distressing accident occurred Friday evening by which little Miss Mary, daughter of Col. H. C. Clements, president of the North Alabama Agriculture school at Athens lost an eye and sustained a painful wound. She was doing something with a pair of sharp pointed shears when she fell and the point of one blade entered her eye, destroying the sight, and the other point entering her face just above the eye.

RESIGNED.

Richard F. Johnston, for several years, city editor of the Birmingham News, has resigned from the staff of that newspaper. He began his work for the News eleven years ago, and during the interim he has won an enviable position in the esteem of newspaper men of Alabama and adjoining states, contributing very largely to the success of the News. He won the confidence and good will of the Birmingham public, and never has he in any measure abused the public trust reposed in him.

TAYLOR FAVORED.

A petition asking the appointment of Hon. Hannis Taylor, of Mobile, to the presidency of the state university, was circulated among the members of the constitutional convention and it was signed by 95 per cent. of them.

STOLE A MARCH.

The Birmingham, Selma and New Orleans railroad will pass into the control of the L. & N. on July 1st. A few days ago a contract was let to extend the road a distance of twenty-seven miles. Now it is understood that the ultimate destination of the road is Meridian. In view of these facts it appears that the L. & N. intends to shut out the Southern from New Orleans, while giving itself practicaly a double track from the mineral regions of Alabama to the three principal ports on the gulf—Pensacola, Mobile and New Orleans.

SUSPICIOUS.

George Walters, aged 26, was found dead in his home, near Evansville, Ind., Thursday. His wife says he committed suicide. Neighbors who heard the husband and wife quarreling refuse to accept the suicide theory. The coroner is investigating. It is said Mrs. Walters insisted on the body being buried without an inquest, but the officials refused.

COMMERCIAL CLUBS.

What the State Industrial Association is Doing.

The Alabama Commercial and Industrial Association is in session in Montgomery, and the meetings are said to be most interesting.

The delegates from the different cities are prominent men of the business and professional world, not a few of them being members of the constitutional convention.

The association has prepared a petition to the constitutional convention to limit the life of municipal franchises to corporations to a definite and reasonable term of years and make the value of franchises returnable as real property for taxation; also a resolution protesting to the constitutional convention against a reduction of the general limit of the tax rate, asking a special tax for school purposes, that the power of a citizen to vote according to his wealth, should not be incorporated in the constitution; also that provision should be made by the proper school authorities for more practical education, with special reference to that department generally known as manual training.

A resolution was passed requesting the governor to call a Good Roads convention next October or November, also a memorial to Congress relating to locks and dams on the Coosa river.

FIREWORKS EXPLODED

And Sixteen Persons are Dead.

Sixteen people are supposed to have been killed and a number injured to-day in a fire following a series of explosions among a quantity of fireworks in a store in Patterson, N. J. The store was on the ground floor of a four-story frame tenement building. The cause of the explosion is not known. The property loss will not exceed $35,000.

Ten families occupied flats in the buildings. So great was the force of the explosion that a boy playing in the street half a block away was lifted from his feet and hurled against an iron fence. A trolley car was directly in front of the building when the explosion occurred. The burst of flame scorched the sides of the car and singed the hair of the passengers.

A number of those who were on the upper floors of the building when the explosion took place were either stunned and then burned to death or found escape cut off and were suffocated.

The fire department had hardly begun work when the whole upper part of the building fell. The captain and two of his men were buried under the debris. One of the men is badly hurt.

HARSH TREATMENT.

Birmingham Attorney Shot for His Pains.

Persecuted, as she claims, by the attention of Harry Harsh, a lawyer, Mrs. Turnham, at 7:45 o'clock Saturday morning shot him in the leg. Then she went to the office of Sheriff Burgin and coolly announced:

"I've shot Harry Harsh, and I had to do it."

At the scene of the alleged crime it was stated that Mrs. Turnham had been subjected to annoyance from Harsh for some time and that she had been annoyed for nearly a year and had to shoot. She said that this was not the first time she had had occasion to order Harsh from her home.

Japan is about to build a monument in honor of Commodore Perry, who "opened" that country to intercourse with the civilized world.

PROPOSED CONSOLIDATION.

The laying of the corner-stone of the new city hall at Ensley will probably be done by the several secret organizations of the towns of Ensley, Pratt City and Wylam. It is further stated that committees have been appointed from the three towns, which will confer together with reference to a combination or consolidation of the three into one municipality, making greater Ensley, giving the new town a population of about thirty thousand. It is thought the movement will receive favorable consideration.

THE PRICE OF OIL

Will Not Go Up on This Account.

A 35,000 barrel oil tank at Toledo, O., belonging to the Standard Oil Company, was struck by lightning Thursday. It was full of oil, which burned for several hours, entailing a loss of $40,000.

THE thirteenth annual session of the Alabama Press Association was held at Montgomery last Thursday and Friday, President Rhodes in the chair.

President Rhodes said that it was usual for the President to make an address going over the past year's work but that he had prepared nothing for this meeting. He paid eloquent tribute to the members of the association who have departed this life during the past twelve months, and hoped that suitable memorials would be prepared and incorporated in the proceedings. He said that he becomes more and more convinced each year of the great responsibility resting upon those who put into print their thoughts upon public and private questions. The influence was co-equal with the responsibility, and in elaboration of this thought said: "The Constitutional convention would not now be in session in the State capitol but for the press of Alabama. It is a remarkably strong body of men who should rise to the loftiest heights of patriotic performance of duty. To do this—to formulate the soundest and wisest Constitution possible—they should not longer permit themselves to be embarrassed by the late Democratic platform, a hastily considered and unwise pronunciamento. If the Convention was charged with promulgating a Constitution without submitting it to the people, they might hesitate to depart from party pledges. But the Constitution is to be submitted to the people for ratification, and the Convention can before adjourning issue a proclamation setting forth the difficulties encountered in the task of making the best possible organic law in compliance with platform pledges, and submit their work for final ratification or rejection to the people without subjecting themselves to just criticism. The Convention must do the very best it can with the lights before it to-day. I believe it will, and that its work will be overwhelmingly endorsed at the polls.

In referring to the affairs of the Press Association, Mr. Rhodes urged that there be greater scrutiny into the personnel of those who enjoy the privileges of the Association, the hospitality of individuals and communities and complimentary transportation from the railroads. To preserve its own self-respect and protect its friends, the association should see that on its pleasure jaunts only those go who are entitled to do so. The presence of so many outsiders as went on last year's excursion to Pike's Peak came very nearly creating a scandal.

Col. Rhodes' remarks were frequently and vigorously applauded.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

The Constitutional Convention has passed for enrollment the article on the Executive Department, reported by the Committee of which ex-Governor Jones is chairman There were a number of amendments proposed and a few adopted. The convention is now holding two sessions duly and seems to have settled down to the real work in hand. The Committee on Suffrage and Elections is expected to make report on any day, but thus far has failed to agree.

Mr. Reynolds has introduced the following resolution in the Constitutional Convention:

Resolution 178, Whereas this convention was called chiefly for the purpose of regulating the suffrage,

And whereas, this convention has previously pledged itself to be bound by the enabling act of the General Assembly, and

Whereas, one half the time limit of said enabling act has already expired and it would be unwise to rush through a suffrage plan,

Be it resolved by the convention assembled that the Suffrage Committee be and is hereby instructed to make a report not later than Monday next.

Referred to Committee on Suffrage and Elections.

Peculiarities of Crime.

One of the strangest peculiarities of human nature is its inclination to imitate the misdeeds of others. Crime is epidemical. A particularly dreadful murder, the details of which are set forth in all the newspapers, often has the effect of inducing similar crimes. One of the reasons, and probably the chief reason, why public executions were abolished in England, was that instead of acting as a deterrent the execution had the contrary effect of inciting to murder.

In 1885 a woman of Geneva, named Lombardi, killed her four children. She admitted that she had been reading of a woman who killed her husband, and the very circumstantial account had made her wish to imitate the crime, but as her husband was dead she killed the children. This is only one instance out of hundreds which have come to our notice.

The infectious nature of self murder receives a striking testimony in the following incident: Dr. Oppenheim of Hamburg had to examine the body of a man who had cut his throat and had died after some days of suffering. The medico told his assistant that death would have been immediate if the man had made the cut in a way which he illustrated, and he was startled two days later to learn that his assistant had attempted to commit suicide by lacerating himself in that very manner. The man admitted that he had never thought of suicide until the day of the examination and the doctor's remark.—London Globe.

A WORTHY SUCCESSOR

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucuous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "SNUFFLES the GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use

300 PERSONS DROWNED

JOHNSTOWN AND GALVESTON HORRORS DUPLICATED.

TORNADOES STRIKE AT DIFFERENT POINTS

Pittsburg and Vicinity Suffers Heavily—Murder Suspected — Stole Cattle from the Indians — Terrible Explosion at Patterson, N. J.

JOHNSTOWN PARALLEL.

An Awful Flood Horror in West Virginia.

Shortly after midnight Saturday a terrible storm struck the Pocahontas coal field in West Virginia and as a result 300 lives are lost and $2,000,000 damage done to mining and lumbering interests alone.

The little town of Keystone, with a population of about 2,000, seems the greatest sufferer, practically the entire town being washed away. This is the principal town in the Pocahontas coal fields from which the mining population purchased supplies. A great number of the coal and coke plants through the Pocahontas coal region are reported practically destroyed and in some instances entirely washed away. Owing to the very high water which has flooded the region and prevented communication anything like a correct estimate of the loss of property is impossible, but from the best information obtainable so far today, the loss of property will easily reach two million dollars.

A rough estimate places the number of bridges washed away between Bluefield and Vivian yard, a distance of twenty-eight miles, at from fifteen to twenty and it will be impossible to get trains to Vivian and points west under a week or ten days. This will render it impossible to get relief into the stricken district and with those who escaped with their lives, homeless and without food, indescribable suffering is inevitable.

Nothing whatever has been heard from the section of country between Vivian and Williamson other than that the Tug river is reported as being entirely out of its banks and higher than ever known by the oldest inhabitants. Out of twelve miles of main line double track, only one mile remains. Bodies are being recovered many miles down the stream where they were washed ashore. From the meager reports describing the force of the storm at Keystone it would appear that the damage rivals that of Johnstown and is equal to the Galveston horror. There is no telegraphic communication west of Bluefield, as the telegraph wires were swept away along with the railroad tracks. It is said by the telegraph officials that the lines are useless between Kenova, W. Va., and Bluefield, a distance of 200 miles.

It is not known how far into the mountains the storm extended, but it is stated that every one of the thirty-three flat-top coal plants have suffered to some extent. Great damage is also reported in the Clinch valley section, but no lives are reported lost along this valley.

There was a high wind and a rainfall of 8.25 inches. The Kanawha river at Charleston is rising. The people are preparing for a flood. The Kanawha and Michigan railroad lost three bridges and is tied up. A landslide on the Chesapeake and Ohio tied up that road. The troops have been ordered out to guard the property.

TORNADO IN ILLINOIS.

Damage estimated at fully $100,000 was done Sunday night by a tornado that swept across Logan county, unroofing public buildings, wrecking residences and business houses, leveling great tracts of grain and demolishing outbuildings of all sorts. One end of a large brick chapel building at the Illinois asylum for feeble-minded children was torn out and the forest surrounding the state property was ruined. In Lincoln the worst damage was done to the factory district.

WARNER COAL.

About one hundred and fifty men were taken out of the drift at Warner Mines and were put into the slope. The company decided to close the drifts down for a while. There are over four hundred men working in it. Just now this slope has more men working in it than any other mine in the South. The daily output of coal by next week will average 1,800 tons.

TORNADO AT PITTSBURG.

Kills Four Persons and Damages Much Property.

Pittsburg and vicinity suffered Saturday from the fiercest wind storm known in the district for years. Four lives are known to have been lost, one of them was that of a ten-year-old hero who saved his younger brother from drowning.

Conservative estimates place the loss at $200,000. It is a miracle that no lives were lost in Allegheny. In the Butchersrund district the famous flood of 1874 was outdone except in the loss of life. The entire business portion of the town of Turtle Creek was flooded. The works of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company at East Pittsburg were flooded. Little damage was done to the buildings, but the machinery, tools and work in progress on the lower floor was covered by water and will be injured.

The Turtle Creek district was again visited by a heavy rain storm Sunday and the former conditions were duplicated, with even more destruction. Damage to the town and valley amounting to thousands of dollars was done. At East Pittsburg the Westinghouse plant, which extends for nearly a mile parallel with the hill, was submerged again with six feet of water on the lower floor, which left three feet of mud when it receded. More than 400 street car motors are apparently destroyed, and the loss to the Westinghouse Company, it is believed, will reach $500,000.

TERRIBLE HAVOC.

Naper, Neb., Suffers Bitterly By a Tornado.

A fearful tornado visited Naper, Neb., and vicinity Thursday night. Of the family of Jacob Greening, Mr. Greening and his wife, who are fatally hurt, and their fourteen-year-old daughter, Grace, who is seriously injured, are all that survive. The family of Jacob Berg and a man named Metz were injured when their homes were demolished, but not seriously.

Mrs. Anderson said: "When I saw the storm coming, I grabbed the youngest child and took two with me. The storm took the child right into the air and that was the last of it."

All communication with the outside world is cut off and it is impossible to learn what other damage the storm did.

Mrs. Greening, mother of the Greening family, is expected to live but a short time. The father of the Greening family was found a quarter of a mile from the house badly mangled.

Little Maggie and Jacob Greening were found 600 yards from where the house stood.

The storm cloud appeared about 5 o'clock and traveled down the Keyapaha river. It seemed to rise and skip some houses and then swoop down and demolish. The tornado was preceded by a severe hailstorm. Stones fell that are said to have measured ten inches in circumference.

HE NEEDS SPECTACLES.

Wednesday, while the German Crown Prince was driving, an intoxicated man approached his carriage and aimed a blow with a stick at a window where the prince was seated. The individual, who described himself as a clerk, was arrested. He said he merely desired to see the prince more closely.

The Literary Digest sagely asks: "Should the poet read his own works in public?" Save us from the infliction!

THEY WANT TO GET OUT.

Convicts Set Fire to Nebraska Penitentiary.

The remaining wing of the Nebraska penitentiary building, part of which was burned last March, narrowly escaped being destroyed Sunday evening from a fire, started, Governor Savage and Warden Davis say, by convicts. An investigation showed that a candle had been lighted and so placed that it would set fire to a mass of broom corn. The nozzle of the hose had been plugged but the pressure of the water forced the plug. The loss was small.

Ground has been broken for the new school house which is to be erected at Jasper. Mention was made some time ago to raise funds with which to construct this building, and the contract was let to local parties. Ground has been broken and the work of construction will be pushed in the hope of getting the building ready for occupancy by the time the school term opens.

ALABAMA EDITORS.

The Montgomery Meeting a Decided Success.

The Alabama Press Association meeting is over and the excursion is off.

When the Association assembled on Thursday welcoming speeches were delivered for the city by the mayor, Hon. E. B. Joseph; for the Commercial and Industrial Association and the press. Hon. W. W. Screws, of the Montgomery Advertiser. Response was made by Editor J. C. Williams of the Talladega Mountain Home.

The annual address of the president, Rufus N. Rhodes, followed.

The secretary's report was most encouraging. One paragraph reads: "The association is in the most prosperous condition in its history. There are on the rolls 132 members, and of that number twenty-seven new members have been received and added to its rolls this year. From what your secretary can learn, the newspapers are doing better from a material standpoint, and the editors are putting forth their best efforts to make their papers a credit to themselves and an honor to the profession."

The following was the program:

Paper.—"How to Improve and Strengthen Our Association"—W. H. H. Judson, Bessemer Weekly.

Annual Essay.—Mrs. C. H. Frye, Pratt City Herald.

Paper.—"The Obligations of the Press to the Furtherance of Morality"—S. P. West, Alabama Christian Advocate.

Annual Poem—C. H. Greer, Marion Standard.

Paper.—"My Experience in Alabama Journalism"—Isaac Grant, Grove Hill Democrat.

Annual Oration—H. S. Doster, Prattville Progress.

Paper.—"Relations of the Press to a Political Campaign"—Erwin Craighead, Mobile Register.

Address. "The Country Newspaper as a Business Venture"—W. H. Cather, Asheville Aegis.

The secretary read a letter from the clerk of the constitutional convention conveying greetings and a copy of the resolution, No. 171, adopted by that body. Resolutions were passed on the death of Governor Samford, and others greeting Governor Jelks, a newspaper man, were also adopted.

The new officers are:

President—William E. W. Yerby, of the Greensboro Watchman.

First Vice-President—Tom Garner, of the Tuskaloosa Gazette.

Second Vice-President—W. M. Bunting, of the Florence Herald.

Third Vice-President—P. F. Miles, of the Union Springs Herald.

Fourth Vice-President—S. P. West, of the Alabama Christian Advocate.

Secretary—J. Asa Rountree, elected for the eleventh term.

Treasurer—J. C. Orr.

Orator—Chappell Cory, of the Montgomery Journal.

Essayist—Mrs. Sidney Blau, of Troy.

Poet—Rufus N. Rhodes, of Birmingham.

Historian—W. W. Screws, of Montgomery.

Mobile was selected as the next meeting place.

The following resolution was adopted: Resolved, That the constitutional convention be requested to incorporate in the proposed new constitution for Alabama a clause providing that all county laws as adopted by each legislature be printed in one newspaper of general circulation in each county to which said laws apply.

Adjourned.

A good story is being told of Lord Charles Beresford, the second in command of England's Mediterranean fleet. Vice-Admiral Fisher, the commander of the fleet, has offered a prize, known as the "Malta Cup," which is rowed for annually by boat crews from the various ships of the fleet. It has happened that the crew of his flagship has won the cup every year until this, when the crew from the Ramillies, Beresford's ship, was the victor. A day or two later the fleet was practicing manoeuvres, and Fisher was much dissatisfied with the way the Ramillies was handled. He accordingly signalled Beresford: "Explain your reason for being late in executing this manoeuvre." Immediately came the reply: "We are towing the 'Malta Cup.'" This was almost worthy of Bob Evans.

For the first time since the Grand Army of the Republic was organized the mortality in the order last year went beyond 10,000. It is estimated that within four or five years one-half of the 400,000 members living in 1890 will have passed from the rolls.

THE DEADLY HOT WAVE.

OUR WEATHER BUREAU'S STUDY OF SUMMER'S CHIEF TERROR.

Long-Distance Prediction Worthless — A Three to Six Days' Wave Means a Crop Loss of 20 Per Cent, and an Incalculable Sacrifice of Life and Property.

This is the season of the year when the weather bureau endeavors to cooperate with the department of agriculture in the effort to furnish the farmer with some intimation of the kind of weather he may expect from day to day, writes the Washington correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser. While this is a matter of dollars and cents with the farmer it is oftentimes a question of life or death with the dweller in cities, and is of equal interest at least. No damage results in town or country from average summer weather, even though it may be considered somewhat torrid. It is the "hot wave" which ruins the farmers' prospects for a bountiful harvest and brings death and suffering to prisoners within the city blocks.

Mr. A. T. Burrows, the weather bureau expert on hot waves, modestly summarizes the results of many years of investigation in this particular direction by saying that the only positive knowledge which has been acquired is that during a hot wave the eastward circulation of the atmosphere, both upper and lower, is for the time being almost totally suspended and that radiation is at that time at a minimum. He takes occasion, however, to puncture the reputation of several well known long-distance weather prophets by declaring that while it is quite practicable to forecast high temperature for a period of from four to five days, predictions for a longer time are the merest guess work, and not entitled to credence.

The hot wave occupies the most important position among all weather phenomena in the destruction of life and property which follows its wake. A summer hailstorm may destroy considerable property over a limited area, a high wind may cause damage of more serious nature and a tornado is still more destructive of property, and usually accompanied by loss of human life, but all these are local in their effect and of short duration. Even a hurricane sweeping up from the West Indies carrying death and devastation in its path affects but a relatively small portion of the United States. A general hot wave, however, with its blighting and death dealing temperatures, leaves a trail of ruin so widespread and so great that it cannot be actually measured. The loss to the farmers of Iowa in the destruction of their crops from a single hot wave which visited that section in 1894, amounted to over $50,000,000, or nearly twice as much property as was destroyed in the Galveston flood, and several of the adjacent states suffered nearly as much.

As for the suffering undergone by the millions of humanity day after day in these hot wave periods there is no record nor is one possible. Statistics may be secured as to the number of sunstrokes, but no data are obtainable regarding the sick whose deaths are hastened by the abnormally heated atmosphere. The weather bureau definition of a hot wave is a period of three or more consecutive days during which the temperature reaches or passes 90 degrees, and with few exceptions they occur during the months of June, July, August and September.

Of the great crops of the country corn and cotton are most liable to injury from overheating. In most cases the mere lack of rain is but partially responsible for the blight, as the cooking and firing effect of the intensely heated atmosphere is the source of most of the damage. Crops can recover from a drought, but the destruction of their life-giving properties by a hot wave is fatal. The farmers of the west estimate that during a summer of average heat the occurrence of a hot wave lasting from three to six days will reduce the harvest yield of the country fully 20 percent. The most dangerous time for these excessive temperatures to occur is during July and August, both in the effect upon the crops and upon the health of dwellers in cities.

A careful study of the records of the weather bureau covering a period of 30 years fails to reveal the regular recurrence of summers of excessive heat or that hot waves occur on the same days in succeeding years. The conclusion is that these visitations may be expected at irregular intervals, the numbers and intensity varying greatly each year. The maximum temperature during a hot wave generally comes within 48 hours after the first 90 degrees is recorded. The number of successive days of abnormal heat varies and may range as high is 16 or 17. Two or more periods may come in close succession, and in the popular mind these are associated as one long spell, as for example, the month of August and the first part of September in 1900.

It is a very exceptional summer when at least one of these hot waves does not sweep the country. Fewer occur in June than in any other summer month. July furnishes the greatest number and August and September are not far behind. In the last two months a hot wave is likely to be longer than in the earlier part of the season. No part of the United States escapes this scourge. At times only one section of the country is affected and at other times half the United States suffers under the same heated term.

On the great plains of the middle west the most severe effects of the hot waves are noted. It is here they frequently have their birth. They are often attended by hot winds which bear a relation to the hot wave not unlike that of the tornado to the general cyclone. The southern states are more free from this visitation than the others, though they do not escape entirely. A hot wave results from a stagnation of the atmosphere, and as the area of high temperature drifts slowly from west to east and is driven off to sea by the advent of an area of high pressure the heated term comes to a close and the normal circulation of the temperature is resumed.

The hot wave of August and September last year will long be remembered on account of its length and intensity. (In the east it was especially severe, although its influence extended westward beyond the Mississippi river. This wave had its inception in northern New York, and made its way south and to the Atlantic coast. Here it apparently met the oceanic high area, which acted as an insurmountable barrier to the eastward flow of the atmosphere, thus closing the outlet for the escape of warm air from the land. The introduction of new and fresh air almost ceased, thus preventing any lowering of the temperature at night.

This atmosphere condition was so powerful that it acted as a barrier to the northward progress of a hurricane about September 1. This hurricane was deflected into the Gulf of Mexico and finally reached Galveston, bringing with it death to thousands of people and destruction to millions of property. The storm traveled from Texas into Iowa, and thence to the St. Lawrence valley. It carried with it the stagnant heated air which had accumulated in the eastern states and brought to mankind the insufferably hot weather of the preceding six weeks. Thus Galveston owes to New York the storm which wrecked the city, and the eastern states owe to that visitation the termination of a heated term which was killing people by the hundreds in the large eastern cities.

QUAINT AND CURIOUS.

The "arsenical walk" is due to the use of impure beverages. The arsenic accumulates in the system, hardens the muscles and causes a stride as if both legs were of wood. The victim falls if he tries to run.

An English paper not long ago told of a most accomplished physician who lost a good part of his practice because it was his invariable custom to enter a sickroom rubbing his hands and exclaiming: "And how are we today? Better, I am sure."

Jesse Powell of Emporia, Kan., says his wife has figured it out recently that during the past 35 years she had baked 191,625 hot biscuits, more than half of which he had eaten. They have hot biscuits at one meal every day. Mr. Powell weighs more than 200 pounds and attributes his fine health to the hot biscuit cure.

Snake structure is enormously curious. The vertebrae range in number from 300 to 30, but are invariable in each species. That is to say, a snake of a certain sort six feet long has exactly the same number of ribs as a snake of similar species only one foot long. Snakes crawl by moving forward each pair of ribs which is attached to a powerful cross-scale on the belly.

A species of marine plant, called grasswrack, has been found in the Kuenlun mountains, in Asia, 16,500 feet above sea-level. The plants were not growing, but were found, with their leaves and fruit, deposited in a bed 10 or 12 feet in thickness, which was covered and interspersed with strata of blue clay. It is believed that the deposit once formed part of the bottom of a salt lake.

Colonel Elijah de Beard of Gilmer county, Ga., lives in a one-room stone structure built over his wife's grave. The structure is small but substantially octagon of stone, and on the iron opening into the single room is the inscription: "One in life and one in death." In the right-hand corner is the grave of his wife; a secondary space near by he has reserved for himself. Around the windows flowers have been planted, and the venerable patriarch spends the days in beautifying the surroundings. On the anniversary of her death, with the assistance of the local pastor, the funeral ceremony is repeated.

How He Remembered.

Remembering names is one of the hardest tasks of a public man. Speaker Henderson tells a story of his going to Washington on a visit many years ago, when he had a few minutes' conversation one morning with Mr. Blaine, who was the speaker of the house.

Six years later he again visited the capital on business, and after staying in the hotel several days met Mr. Blaine, who promptly called him by name. Before accepting this as a miraculous feat of memory, Mr. Henderson questioned one of the waiters, who said:

"Yes, sir, Mr. Blaine asked who you were, and I told him, 'Mr. Henderson of Iowa.'"

Many are the devices that most public men are compelled to employ to bring back to memory a name which they think they ought to remember.

The late Congressman Brosius of Pennsylvania told of talking with a constituent for nearly an hour without being able to think of his name, when suddenly the man lifted his foot enough to show the tacks "quilted" on the sole of his shoe, which, according to the fashion of that time, bore his initials. Then the name came to him.—Youth's Companion.

JOHNSTOWN PARALLEL.

An Awful Flood Horror in West Virginia.

Shortly after midnight Saturday a terrible storm struck the Pocahontas coal field in West Virginia and as a result 300 lives are lost and $2,000,000 damage done to mining and lumbering interests alone.

The little town of Keystone, with a population of about 2,000, seems the greatest sufferer, practically the entire town being washed away. This is the principal town in the Pocahontas coal fields from which the mining population purchased supplies. A great number of the coal and coke plants through the Pocahontas coal region are reported practically destroyed and in some instances entirely washed away. Owing to the very high water which has flooded the region and prevented communication anything like a correct estimate of the loss of property is impossible, but from the best information obtainable so far today, the loss of property will easily reach two million dollars.

A rough estimate places the number of bridges washed away between Bluefield and Vivian yard, a distance of twenty eight miles, at from fifteen to twenty and it will be impossible to get trains to Vivian and points west under a week or ten days. This will render it impossible to get relief into the stricken district and with those who escaped with their lives, homeless and without food, indescribable suffering is inevitable.

Nothing whatever has been heard from the section of country between Vivian and Williamson other than that the Tug river is reported as being entirely out of its banks and higher than ever known by the oldest inhabitants. Out of twelve miles of main line double track, only one mile remains. Bodies are being recovered many miles down the stream where they were washed ashore. From the meager reports describing the force of the storm at Keystone it would appear that the damage rivals that of Johnstown and is equal to the Galveston horror. There is no telegraphic communication west of Bluefield, as the telegraph wires were swept away along with the railroad tracks. It is said by the telegraph officials that the lines are useless between Kenova, W. Va., and Bluefield, a distance of 200 miles.

It is not known how far into the mountains the storm extended, but it is stated that every one of the thirty-three flat-top coal plants have suffered to some extent. Great damage is also reported in the Clinch valley section, but no lives are reported lost along this valley.

There was a high wind and a rainfall of 8.25 inches. The Kanawha river at Charleston is rising. The people are preparing for a flood. The Kanawha and Michigan railroad lost three bridges and is tied up. A landslide on the Chesapeake and Ohio tied up that road. The troops have been ordered out to guard the property.

TORNADO IN ILLINOIS.

Damage estimated at fully $100,000 was done Sunday night by a tornado that swept across Logan county, unroofing public buildings, wrecking residences and business houses, leveling great tracts of grain and demolishing outbuildings of all sorts. One end of a large brick chapel building at the Illinois asylum for feeble-minded children was torn out and the forest surrounding the state property was ruined. In Lincoln the worst damage was done to the factory district.

WARNER COAL.

About one hundred and fifty men were taken out of the drift at Warner Mines and were put into the slope. The company decided to close the drifts down for a while. There are over four hundred men working in it. Just now this slope has more men working in it than any other mine in the South. The daily output of coal by next week will average 1,800 tons.

TORNADO AT PITTSBURG.

Kills Four Persons and Damages Much Property.

Pittsburg and vicinity suffered Saturday from the fiercest wind storm known in the district for years. Four lives are known to have been lost, one of them was that of a ten-year-old hero who saved his younger brother from drowning.

Conservative estimates place the loss at $200,000. It is a miracle that no lives were lost in Allegheny. In the Butcherarund district the famous flood of 1874 was outdone except in the loss of life. The entire business portion of the town of Turtle Creek was flooded. The works of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company at East Pittsburg were flooded. Little damage was done to the buildings, but the machinery, tools and work in progress on the lower floor was covered by water and will be injured.

The Turtle Creek district was again visited by a heavy rain storm Sunday and the former conditions were duplicated, with even more destruction. Damage to the town and valley amounting to thousands of dollars was done. At East Pittsburg the Westinghouse plant, which extends for nearly a mile parallel with the hill, was submerged again with six feet of water on the lower floor, which left three feet of mud when it receded. More than 400 street car motors are apparently destroyed, and the loss to the Westinghouse Company, it is believed, will reach $500,000.

TERRIBLE HAVOC.

Naper, Neb., Suffers Bitterly By a Tornado.

A fearful tornado visited Naper, Neb., and vicinity Thursday night. Of the family of Jacob Greening, Mr. Greening and his wife, who are fatally hurt, and their fourteen-year-old daughter, Grace, who is seriously injured, are all that survive. The family of Jacob Berg and a man named Metz were injured when their homes were demolished, but not seriously.

Mrs. Anderson said: "When I saw the storm coming, I grabbed the youngest child and took two with me. The storm took the child right into the air and that was the last of it."

All communication with the outside world is cut off and it is impossible to learn what other damage the storm did.

Mrs. Greening, mother of the Greening family, is expected to live but a short time. The father of the Greening family was found a quarter of a mile from the house badly mangled.

Little Maggie and Jacob Greening were found 600 yards from where the house stood.

The storm cloud appeared about 5 o'clock and traveled down the Keyapaha river. It seemed to rise and skip some houses and then swoop down and demolish. The tornado was preceded by a severe hailstorm. Stones fell that are said to have measured ten inches in circumference.

HE NEEDS SPECTACLES.

Wednesday, while the German Crown Prince was driving, an intoxicated man approached his carriage and aimed a blow with a stick at a window where the prince was seated. The individual, who described himself as a clerk, was arrested. He said he merely desired to see the prince more closely.

Convicts Set Fire to Nebraska Penitentiary.

The remaining wing of the Nebraska penitentiary building, part of which was burned last March, narrowly escaped being destroyed Sunday evening from a fire, started, Governor Savage and Warden Davis say, by convicts. An investigation showed that a candle had been lighted and so placed that it would set fire to a mass of broom corn. The nozzle of the hose had been plugged but the pressure of the water forced the plug. The loss was small.

Ground has been broken for the new school house which is to be erected at Jasper. Mention was made some time ago to raise funds with which to construct this building, and the contract was let to local parties. Ground has been broken and the work of construction will be pushed in the hope of getting the building ready for occupancy by the time the school term opens.

ALABAMA EDITORS.

The Montgomery Meeting a Decided Success.

The Alabama Press Association meeting is over and the excursion is off.

When the Association assembled on Thursday welcoming speeches were delivered for the city by the mayor, Hon. E. B. Joseph; for the Commercial and Industrial Association and the press, Hon. W. W. Screws, of the Montgomery Advertiser. Response was made by Editor J. C. Williams of the Talladega Mountain Home.

The annual address of the president, Rufus N. Rhodes, followed.

The secretary's report was most encouraging. One paragraph reads: "The association is in the most prosperous condition in its history. There are on the rolls 132 members, and of that number twenty-seven new members have been received and added to its rolls this year. From what your secretary can learn, the newspapers are doing better from a material standpoint, and the editors are putting forth their best efforts to make their papers a credit to themselves and an honor to the profession."

The following was the program:

Paper.—"How to Improve and Strengthen Our Association"—W. H. H. Judson, Bessemer Weekly.

Annual Essay.—Mrs. C. H. Frye, Pratt City Herald.

Paper.—"The Obligations of the Press to the Furtherance of Morality"—S. P. West, Alabama Christian Advocate.

Annual Poem—C. H. Greer, Marion Standard.

Paper.—"My Experience in Alabama Journalism"—Isaac Grant, Grove Hill Democrat.

Annual Oration—H. S. Doster, Prattville Progress.

Paper.—"Relations of the Press to a Political Campaign"—Erwin Craighead, Mobile Register.

Address. "The Country Newspaper as a Business Venture"—W. H. Cather, Asheville Aegis.

The secretary read a letter from the clerk of the constitutional convention conveying greetings and a copy of the resolution, No. 171, adopted by that body. Resolutions were passed on the death of Governor Samford, and others greeting Governor Jelks, a newspaper man, were also adopted.

The new officers are:

President—William E. W. Yerby, of the Greensboro Watchman.

First Vice-President—Tom Garner, of the Tuskaloosa Gazette.

Second Vice-President—W. M. Bunting, of the Florence Herald.

Third Vice-President—P. F. Miles, of the Union Springs Herald.

Fourth Vice-President—S. P. West, of the Alabama Christian Advocate.

Secretary—J. Asa Rountree, elected for the eleventh term.

Treasurer—J. C. Orr.

Orator—Chappell Cory, of the Montgomery Journal.

Essayist—Mrs. Sidney Blau, of Troy.

Poet—Rufus N. Rhodes, of Birmingham.

Historian—W. W. Screws, of Montgomery.

Mobile was selected as the next meeting place.

The following resolution was adopted: Resolved, That the constitutional convention be requested to incorporate in the proposed new constitution for Alabama a clause providing that all county laws as adopted by each legislature be printed in one newspaper of general circulation in each county to which said laws apply.

Adjourned.

A good story is being told of Lord Charles Beresford, the second in command of England's Mediterranean fleet. Vice-Admiral Fisher, the commander of the fleet, has offered a prize, known as the "Malta Cup," which is rowed for annually by boat crews from the various ships of the fleet. It has happened that the crew of his flagship has won the cup every year until this, when the crew from the Ramillies, Beresford's ship, was the victor. A day or two later the fleet was practicing manoeuvres, and Fisher was much dissatisfied with the way the Ramillies was handled. He accordingly signalled Beresford: "Explain your reason for being late in executing this manoeuvre." Immediately came the reply: "We are towing the 'Malta Cup.'" This was almost worthy of Bob Evans.

For the first time since the Grand Army of the Republic was organized the mortality in the order last year went beyond 10,000. It is estimated that within four or five years one-half of the 400,000 members living in 1896 will have passed from the rolls.

THE DEADLY HOT WAVE.

OUR WEATHER BUREAU'S STUDY OF SUMMER'S CHIEF TERROR.

Long-Distance Prediction Worthless — A Three to Six Days' Wave Means a Crop Loss of 20 Per Cent. and an Incalculable Sacrifice of Life and Property.

This is the season of the year when the weather bureau endeavors to cooperate with the department of agriculture in the effort to furnish the farmer with some intimation of the kind of weather he may expect from day to day, writes the Washington correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser. While this is a matter of dollars and cents with the farmer it is oftentimes a question of life or death with the dweller in cities, and is of equal interest at least. No damage results in town or country from average summer weather, even though it may be considered somewhat torrid. It is the "hot wave" which ruins the farmers' prospects for a bountiful harvest and brings death and suffering to prisoners within the city blocks.

Mr. A. T. Burrows, the weather bureau expert on hot waves, modestly summarizes the results of many years of investigation in this particular direction by saying that the only positive knowledge which has been acquired is that during a hot wave the eastward circulation of the atmosphere, both upper and lower, is for the time being almost totally suspended and that radiation is at that time at a minimum. He takes occasion, however, to puncture the reputation of several well known long-distance weather prophets by declaring that while it is quite practicable to forecast high temperature for a period of from four to five days, predictions for a longer time are the merest guess work, and not entitled to credence.

The hot wave occupies the most important position among all weather phenomena in the destruction of life and property which follows its wake. A summer hailstorm may destroy considerable property over a limited area, a high wind may cause damage of more serious nature and a tornado is still more destructive of property, and usually accompanied by loss of human life, but all these are local in their effect and of short duration. Even a hurricane sweeping up from the West Indies carrying death and devastation in its path affects but a relatively small portion of the United States. A general hot wave, however, with its blighting and death dealing temperatures, leaves a trail of ruin so widespread and so great that it cannot be actually measured. The loss to the farmers of Iowa in the destruction of their crops from a single hot wave which visited that section in 1894, amounted to over $50,000,000, or nearly twice as much property as was destroyed in the Galveston flood, and several of the adjacent states suffered nearly as much.

As for the suffering undergone by the millions of humanity day after day in these hot wave periods there is no record nor is one possible. Statistics may be secured as to the number of sunstrokes, but no data are obtainable regarding the sick whose deaths are hastened by the abnormally heated atmosphere. The weather bureau definition of a hot wave is a period of three or more consecutive days during which the temperature reaches or passes 90 degrees, and with few exceptions they occur during the months of June, July, August and September.

Of the great crops of the country corn and cotton are most liable to injury from overheating. In most cases the mere lack of rain is but partially responsible for the blight, as the cooking and firing effect of the intensely heated atmosphere is the source of most of the damage. Crops can recover from a drought, but the destruction of their life-giving properties by a hot wave is fatal. The farmers of the west estimate that during a summer of average heat the occurrence of a hot wave lasting from three to six days will reduce the harvest yield of the country fully 20 percent. The most dangerous time for these excessive temperatures to occur is during July and August, both in the effect upon the crops and upon the health of dwellers in cities.

A careful study of the records of the weather bureau covering a period of 30 years fails to reveal the regular recurrence of summers of excessive heat or that hot waves occur on the same days in succeeding years. The conclusion is that these visitations may be expected at irregular intervals, the numbers and intensity varying greatly each year. The maximum temperature during a hot wave generally comes within 48 hours after the first 90 degrees is recorded. The number of successive days of abnormal heat varies and may range as high is 16 or 17. Two or more periods may come in close succession, and in the popular mind these are associated as one long spell, as for example, the month of August and the first part of September in 1900.

It is a very exceptional summer when at least one of these hot waves does not sweep the country. Fewer occur in June than in any other summer month. July furnishes the greatest number and August and September are not far behind. In the last two months a hot wave is likely to be longer than in the earlier part of the season. No part of the United States escapes this scourge. At times only one section of the country is affected and at other times half the United States suffers under the same heated term.

On the great plains of the middle west the most severe effects of the hot waves are noted. It is here they frequently have their birth. They are often attended by hot winds which bear a relation to the hot wave not unlike that of the tornado to the general cyclone. The southern states are more free from this visitation than the others, though they do not escape entirely. A hot wave results from a stagnantion of the atmosphere, and as the area of high temperature drifts slowly from west to east and is driven off to sea by the advent of an area of high pressure the heated term comes to a close and the normal circulation of the temperature is resumed.

The hot wave of August and September last year will long be remembered on account of its length and intensity. In the east it was especially severe, although its influence extended westward beyond the Mississippi river. This wave had its inception in northern New York, and made its way south and to the Atlantic coast. Here it apparently met the oceanic high area, which acted as an insurmountable barrier to the eastward flow of the atmosphere, thus closing the outlet for the escape of warm air from the land. The introduction of new and fresh air almost ceased, thus preventing any lowering of the temperature at night.

This atmosphere condition was so powerful that it acted as a barrier to the northward progress of a hurricane about September 1. This hurricane was deflected into the Gulf of Mexico and finally reached Galveston, bringing with it death to thousands of people and destruction to millions of property. The storm traveled from Texas into Iowa, and thence to the St. Lawrence valley. It carried with it the stagnant heated air which had accumulated in the eastern states and brought to mankind the insufferably hot weather of the preceding six weeks. Thus Galveston owes to New York the storm which wrecked the city, and the eastern states owe to that visitation the termination of a heated term which was killing people by the hundreds in the large eastern cities.

QUAINT AND CURIOUS.

The "arsenical walk" is due to the use of impure beverages. The arsenic accumulates in the system, hardens the muscles and causes a stride as if both legs were of wood. The victim falls if he tries to run.

An English paper not long ago told of a most accomplished physician who lost a good part of his practice because it was his invariable custom to enter a sickroom rubbing his hands and exclaiming: "And how are we today? Better, I am sure."

Jesse Powell of Emporia, Kan., says his wife has figured it out recently that during the past 35 years she had baked 191,625 hot biscuits, more than half of which he had eaten. They have hot biscuits at one meal every day. Mr. Powell weighs more than 200 pounds and attributes his fine health to the hot biscuit cure.

Snake structure is enormously curious. The vertebrae range in number from 300 to 30, but are invariable in each species. That is to say, a snake of a certain sort six feet long has exactly the same number of ribs as a snake of similar species only one foot long. Snakes crawl by moving forward each pair of ribs which is attached to a powerful cross-scale on the belly.

A species of marine plant, called grasswrack, has been found in the Kuenlun mountains, in Asia, 16,500 feet above sea-level. The plants were not growing, but were found, with their leaves and fruit, deposited in a bed 10 or 12 feet in thickness, which was covered and interspersed with strata of blue clay. It is believed that the deposit once formed part of the bottom of a salt lake.

Colonel Elijah Je Beard of Gilmer county, Ga., lives in a one-room stone structure built over his wife's grave. The structure is small but substantially octagon of stone, and on the iron opening into the single room is the inscription: "One in life and one in death." In the right-hand corner is the grave of his wife; a secondary space near by he has reserved for himself. Around the windows flowers have been planted, and the venerable patriarch spends the days in beautifying the surroundings. On the anniversary of her death, with the assistance of the local pastor, the funeral ceremony is repeated.

How He Remembered.

Remembering names is one of the hardest tasks of a public man. Speaker Henderson tells a story of his going to Washington on a visit many years ago, when he had a few minutes' conversation one morning with Mr. Blaine, who was the speaker of the house.

Six years later he again visited the capital on business, and after staying in the hotel several days met Mr. Blaine, who promptly called him by name. Before accepting this as a miraculous feat of memory, Mr. Henderson questioned one of the waiters, who said:

"Yes, sir, Mr. Blaine asked who you were, and I told him, 'Mr. Henderson of Iowa.'"

Many are the devices that most public men are compelled to employ to bring back to memory a name which they think they ought to remember.

The late Congressman Brosius of Pennsylvania told of talking with a constituent for nearly an hour without being able to think of his name, when suddenly the man lifted his foot enough to show the tacks "quilted" on the sole of his shoe, which, according to the fashion of that time, bore his initials. Then the name came to him.—Youth's Companion.

THE CUBAN BEE.

A Traveller Finds Him to Be Not Such a Hustler as His American Fellow.

"While down in Cuba recently," said a Bohemian, "I stumbled on to a rather interesting observation in connection with the life of the Cuban bee, and I have marked a very clear difference between the Cuban insect and his American relative. Bees are universally looked upon as industrious, hustling members of the insect world, and have become famed in the earlier school literature on this account. Children are taught that the bee's example is one to be followed, and so far as the American type is concerned, there is no reason for a discontinuance of this lesson. The American bee is a great hustler, and he has sustained the honor conferred upon him in the verses and short stories found in the early readers.

"But with the Cuban bee it is different. They are lazy, trifling fellows, and in the architecture of the hive they do not show that delicacy and precision in the matter of finish and measurement which have made the bee a wonder to some of the men of science. I even believe that I was able to detect some difference in the flavor of Cuban honey, some lack of that daintiness of flavor found in the American product, but this might have been an unconscious prejudice on my part.

"But at any rate the Cuban bee is not like the American bee. I have watched them for hours, and they all look like drones to me when compared to the American type. The Cuban bee has a sort of oxcart movement when he goes about his work. The American bee is snappy, quick, almost electrical. Now, why is this? I have my own theory, and I base it upon the broadest principle of science, a principle universally recognized for its potency in the shaping of character. It is a matter of environment.

"The Cuban bee has been surrounded by slow methods, and awkward, crude ways of doing things. He simply reflects the life, the mannerisms, and the methods about him. He is still the bee of the oxcart age, and buzzes about his business in an oxcart gait. He is a Cuban to the manor born. The American bee's industry may be accounted for in the same way. He is a natural-born hustler. He is an American, full-blooded and full-fledged."—New Orleans Times Democrat.

Landlords in the Riviera.

A young man just returned from a winter in the Riviera was telling some of his friends the other night about the charms of the Italian landlord.

"I reached Genoa without a cent in my pocket," he said, "went to the Poste Restante to get my drafts and found they hadn't come. What to do? Went to the best hotel in the place. If you've got money, go to where people are used to seeing lots of it. Asked for my mail. 'Nothing here for you sir,' says the landlord. 'The deuce you say,' says I. 'I was expecting a remittance.' He just bows and smiles and says: 'Signor will be here for a fortnight? He must see the sights. He needs money.' And over he hands me all I can use in a week. Well, the week ends and still no mail. 'Your remittance hasn't come?' he says. 'You will like some more money?' 'Well, yes, I would,' I say to him, and over it comes. Finally my drafts does come to the general postoffice and I pay him back. It was all of a good two weeks that I had been living like a king on nothing but my face.

"'I don't see how you dare do this kind of thing,' I said.

"He just bowed and smiled. 'We flatter ourselves,' he said, 'that we know gentlemen when we see them.'"—New York Sun.

Loss of Sheep in Australia.

The Australasian Banking Record gives some extraordinary figures relat- to sheep raising in Australia. It appears that during the past eight years the stock of sheep in the Australian Federation has diminished from 124,500,000 to less than 93,000,000, and that it is now probably less owing to the destruction by fire of the Queensland pastures last year. At the end of 1899 there were, according to Government returns, 15,226,470 sheep in Queensland; and the number is now estimated at only a little more than half. But for the advance in price of wool owing to the South African War and other causes, it is said that bankruptcy must have overtaken the squatters and sheep raisers; and the damage to the industry must in any case take years to repair. The same number of the Record which gives the figures of the losses of sheep states that the indebtedness of the Australian population to the banks is now about $25 per head, which is in addition to the public debts, amounting to nearly $200 per head.

No Apparent Cause For Offense.

It was the third day out on an ocean liner, and some of the passengers were just getting acquainted. A lady who had made the trip many times lay comfortably in her steamer chair, when the pretty and stylishly clad daughter of a newly rich family stopped near her, and they drifted into conversation. Presently the lady bowed to a pale-faced man who walked by.

"Who was that?" inquired the girl.

"That was Signor Slambangski, the famous pianist," replied the lady, who then went on to speak of the probable performers at the inveitable concert at the journey's end.

"Oh, are there any musicianers on board?" eagerly inquired the girl.

"I beg your pardon?" said the lady interrogatively.

The girl gazed at her inquiringly.

"What for?" she asked.—New York Mail and Express.

LION COFFEE is now used in millions of homes.

"THE VILLAGE GROCER."
(With due apologies to H. W. Longfellow.)

Under a spreading chestnut tree
The corner grocery stands,
The grocer—mighty man is he
With hard and sinewy hands,
That weigh our goods from morn till night,
And also coffee brands.

His goods are varied in their price
And quality as well,
The store itself looks neat and nice,
As all his neighbors tell.
And his one great ambition is To LION COFFEE sell.

Week in, week out, from morn till night,
You'll hear this fellow blow
About his coffee, always right,
The LION brand, you know;
Because it's pure and honest goods
He tries to make it go!

Not only is it pure and good,
But also very cheap.
Because 'tis best for household use,
A stock he'll always keep.
In LION COFFEE thus his faith
Is both sincere and deep.

Buying—rejoicing—wondering,
His customers attest
That LION COFFEE is, by far,
In quality the best,
And the premiums also are admired
And always in request.

In every package of LION COFFEE you will find a fully illustrated and descriptive list. No housekeeper, in fact, no woman, man, boy or girl will fail to find in the list some article which will contribute to their happiness, comfort and convenience, and which they may have by simply cutting out a certain number of Lion Heads from the wrappers of our one pound sealed packages (which is the only form in which this excellent coffee is sold).

From Atlanta Constitution.

During my recent visit to Newnan I was very greatly impressed by the remarkable fine condition of the public roads in Coweta county. As Mr. T. M. Goodrum, president of the Young Men's Business League, expressed it "Our county roads are even better than the streets of Newnan" and that is saying a good deal," Mr. Goodrum said while his father, Captain I. L. Goodrum, was chairman of the board of county commissioners, he began the agitation of the good roads question. It has, however, remained for Captain I. R. McCollum, Coweta's big farmer and the present chairman of her board of county commissioners, to carry the work into practical effect.

During a drive of twenty miles over the county roads of Coweta county with Captain McCollum I do not remember of the carriage wheel striking a single rock or having run into a hole in the road. There were simply no rocks to strike and no holes to run into. It was a new and exhilarating experience to be able to drive over county roads in Georgia without keeping an eye out for rocks and pitfalls. Not only are the roads in Coweta county delightful to drive over in a carriage but when it comes to hauling produce to town, the farmer realizes the benefit in the decrease of his blacksmith bills and the saving in wear and tear to stock, harness and vehicles. He can haul larger loads with the same amount of force expended, and this, together with the improvement to his property, will pay him many times over for the small additional taxes he has to pay.

While many of the farmers were opposed to this new movement to start with, you could not get them now to go back to the old way for love or money.

We are beginning to see good roads of a permanent character constructed in Fulton county. They are being built out of Atlanta in all directions. This is a mark of progress, and our county commissioners in Fulton are to be congratulated on the work they are doing; but when we see a county without any big chaingang to help her, working her roads in such a manner as to enable you to trot your horse ten miles on a stretch, and doing it all over the county, cross-roads and all, then indeed there is room for congratulation.

Coweta county has not yet reached a point where she can put down the expensive macadam we are using in Fulton county; she is, however, grading down the hills, putting good iron bridges over all the streams, picking up and hauling off the rocks and working her dirt roads so as to leave them as smoothe as a floor. They have learned to leave the road with just the right oval shape, so that it will shed water without being too high in the middle. This point has to be guarded against, or vehicles will slip sidewise when the road is slippery after a rain.

On our drive out we passed some of the hands, two men and a boy picking up stones behind the road machine and hauling them off in a two horse wagon.

"You will notice," said Captain McCollum, "that here the machine, besides cutting off the humps and filling up the holes, threw the dirt and stones toward the center of the road, and so we have to go along and pick them up. In some cases they are hauled off entirely, and then again we use them to fill up bad places and also to prevent washing. Now here," he continued, as we started up a long incline, "you see the gutter on each side of the road has a tendency to wash out too deeply, leaving the road on a ridge, as it were. I shall use the stones here to make small breaks, sloping them toward the outer bank so the water will not cut into the road. Then when the machine comes along next time, they will reverse it and work from the center out, and thus prevent its becoming too high in the middle. By so doing we keep our dirt roads smooth and even. By taking out and picking up the rocks we prevent any tendency of the teams to make holes; for whenever a wagon runs over the rocks it is almost sure to start a hole on the other side. This fills with water, making a soft place and soon there is a bad hole in the road." "And so you work the roads with machines?" I inquired. "How do you like them?"

"Yes. We have five "Good-road" machines in the county. We have the county divided into five sections with one machine to each section. We are greatly pleased with the machines, but we had a fight of it to get them introduced, I can tell you. When I first became chairman of the county commissioners our roads were in a wretched condition. It was as much as a man's life was worth to drive over the county, except at a snail's pace, and one needed a blacksmith outfit to take along and keep things in repair. I saw that if we ever expected to have good roads in Coweta county we must make a beginning and show the people of working them. I saw that the county would have to take the work into their own hands if they were allowed to do it. This was recommended by the grand jury, and I was made chairman. Or rather I was made by my colleagues who said, 'Go ahead, you go ahead and get the machines, and we will back you in this, and do the work.' I found myself saddled with a business. Well, I ordered a machine for each beat, and we got them all at once.

"The next thing was to get further funds to carry on the work, and to this end we voted a tax of 1 per cent for road purposes. It has been claimed by some that the land owners paid more road tax than those who owned no property (which is not true as they benefited); and for this reason I was in favor of the additional tax.

"To secure the labor for the general road work, we allowed five days' work, or its commutation if this tax was paid in advance before the 1st of March. We knocked off 50 cents from the amount on an even $ fixed for the payment of the tax except that it should be paid over the individual who was to work the road. The tax could either pay, or work out. Many, however, commuted at this time at two different times, two days at one time and another, if they so preferred. The idea was to summon the hands as many as were needed, when the overseer required them on the road, and any additional work that was needed could be done. This has been our practice to work the roads whenever they need repairs.

"It took some time," he continued, "to learn the men how to run the machines properly, and we experienced opposition to the method of working the roads at the first by people who wanted to go back to the old way. Some claimed the machines were too heavy and one member of the board made a strong effort to change the policy of the county commissioners and induce us to return to the old methods. I remember at one of the meetings he was very bitter in the matter, and at that time we had quite a strong following who were opposed to machine work on the roads. In answer to his argument I said to him that he was mistaken in his position. That the machine came from the machine being properly operated. I told him I was perfectly willing to leave the question to his fair-minded people, he would give the machine a fair trial as I directed. 'Now,' said I, 'when you go home hitch six of your best mules to the machine—not six mules, but good mules—put the most intelligent man in charge of it and give him another man for a boy to help him operate it, and at our next meeting tell us how he succeeded.' Well, he agreed to the proposition, and the next time I saw him we met he was the most enthusiastic man you ever saw, claiming that he could work as much road in a day with one of those machines as he could with a hundred men.

"It certainly is a fine thing for every man in the county, with possibly one or two exceptions, unanimous in its favor. The result simply makes the difference between good roads and poor roads. There are some people of course whom it is impossible to please no matter what you do. Now there is a man whose place we passed a while back; that man was very mad because we graded down a big hill between his farm and the town, which enables him to haul half as much again with his team as he could before the grade was made.

"Yes, the machine is a fine thing. I heard only last week Campbell county has just purchased three of them with which to work her roads. With the aid of the machine we can get over the roads and keep them in fine condition, and when roads are kept up as they should be it takes a great deal of wet weather before they will become cut up by the travel. The machines also enable us to devote more time to grading down the hills and making other improvements."

The roads in a county are a pretty fair criterion of its prosperity. Coweta county, if she keeps up, will soon be in a position to begin macadamizing her principal roads. She stands today as an object lesson to the state in road improvement.

I was agreeably surprised to find in good shape, for in my own part of Fulton there is still room for considerable improvement in this respect.

Sunday-School Convention.

The Sunday-school Convention met with Union Grove church, Sunday, June 30, 1901. Devotion services were conducted by Bro. Ed Honeycutt. Rev. Greene made some very good remarks on the first subject—"Object of the Sunday-school." There being so many absent that were on the program and the time being spent for the next two subjects, by a vote of the convention, they were passed. Next were recitations by Misses Anna Lee Lowery, Mattie Patton, Liza and Emma Lowery and Mr. Charlie Middlebrooks. The pieces recited were "An Old Man's Story," "Heaven is not reached by a single bound," "Evil influence of mother and sister," "How far from the Grave," "Charley Cousin, the Christian Drummer Boy." All were recited with feeling. The next subject on the program was then taken up and discussed by Bro. Greene—"Christian Education."

It being the noon hour the convention adjourned to meet at one o'clock. Bountiful refreshments were served and after feasting on the good things the good people had prepared, all returned to the church and after singing and prayer, Miss Susie Conway recited "Married to a drunkard," and little Pearl Mitchell recited "What the Sunday-school is for" in an impressive way. By request Misses Mattie Patton and Anna Lee Lowery recited "A free seat," and "Tommy's prayer." Who should attend Sunday-school was ably discussed by C. N. Northcutt, Archie Glass and Prof. Riddle. Miss Nerva Glass recited "Guilty or not guilty" with feeling. Rev. Honeycutt made a very impressive talk on what kind of music to use in the Sunday-school.

Results of the Sunday-school work was freely discussed by Bro. L. H. Reynolds. Master Bob. Armstrong recited a temperence piece which was enjoyed by all. The program was interspersed with music throughout the day led by Bro. Bunion Northcutt. The convention joined heartily in singing "God be with you till we meet again," and adjourned to meet at Rockymount church the fifth Sunday in September.

The convention was well entertained at Union Grove and we hope to visit there again.

THE DOMESTIC CAT.

The prominent attention lately bestowed upon the domestic cat by fashionable society, and the great success of several cat shows, have induced Mr. John E. Diehl, the well known authority on domestic animals, to prepare a handy little volume under the above title. It carefully describes the different breeds and varieties, and states how to keep and rear cats; how to recognize their various diseases and how to treat them. The publishers' price for the book is 50 cents, but the Associated Fanciers, 400 N. 3rd St., Phiadelphia, Pa., will mail a copy of it on receipt of 25 cents to any subscriber of this paper.

Sliding to Happiness.

Old Lady—And so you expect to get married when you grow up?

Little Girl—Of course. Everybody gets married. I won't say "no" like Aunt Lucy did and be an old maid. No, indeed.

"Perhaps you won't like those who ask you."

"Oh, yes, I will. I feel sure that when a real nice little boy—I mean man—comes to ask me to get married I'll be so happy I won't wait to run down stairs to meet him. I'll just slide down the bainsters."

Useful Cement.

A useful cement for mending earthen or stone jars, stopping leaks in the seams of tin pans or iron kettles or tightening loose joints of iron or wood is made by mixing litharge and glycerin to a thick cream. This will resist acids, heat and cold if the article is not used until the cement has hardened.

OLANTON, - - - ALABAMA,

When it is considered that 25,000 patents are issued annually by the United States—nearly four times as many as all the balance of the world—it is not surprising that she should lead all other nations in labor-saving and expediting machinery, thus placing her in the forefront of all material productions.

Sir Robert Griffin, comforting the gloomy Britons, bids them consider that their annual war bill of $300,000,000 comes out of an aggregate income of $7,500,000,000, while Germany, France and Russia are together spending $540,000,000 for war purposes out of the much smaller annual income of about $5,000,000,000.

According to the census of 1900 there are 152 persons to a square mile in New York and 102 to a square mile in Ohio. The Ohio average if spread over the Republic would raise the population of the United States to 400,000,000. If we could reach the Chinese standards of economy, industry and temperance the United States could support on its 1,800,000,000 acres a population of 3,600,000,000.

Census statistics of coke manufacture for 1899 indicate a product valued at $35,585,445, with by-products amounting to $952,027. In 1899 the coke product of the United States was worth $16,498,345, and the by-products $3891. These figures demonstrate impressively the tremendous development of American iron manufacture within the past decade. In 1890 over 92 percent of the coke produced was consumed in blast furnaces, and the figures for 1900 (not yet available) will show, it is confidently anticipated, an even large proportion of use for this purpose.

So lax is the enforcement of some of our own municipal laws and ordinances that it is of some interest to observe the Englishman in London making similar complaint as to the smoke nuisance. It is pointed out that though the sanitary authorities have ample power to prevent the smoke nuisance, no action has yet been taken. The smoke nuisance is held responsible for much of the gloomy and foggy conditions so common in London, and it is asserted that the nuisance is "rapidly becoming a menace to health as well as to the appearance of the metropolis." The evil has become so great and the public authorities have been so lax in dealing with it that now a private society has taken upon itself to attempt to abate the nuisance.

The great "strikes" of oil in Texas have led to a rapid extension of its use for fuel as a substitue for coal. Among the advantages claimed for it are economy, cleanliness and convenience. "The expense of stoking is practically abolished," says the New Orleans Times-Democrat, "for the oil is automatically pumped into the furnaces when needed; it produces the greatest heat, and the cost is materially less than wood, coal or any other product that has heretofore been in use." No difficulty is experienced in changing the furnaces and engines to adapt them to oil. Although the proximity of the Texas oil wells to the ocean gives them a decided advantage in the export trade, the domestic use of their product as fuel will add greatly to its value, while stimulating manufacturers in that section.

The archaeologists, digging among the libraries of Asia, came across the inventory of Croesus and found that that miserable fraud of a millionaire, who has been arousing the envy of generation after generation for thousands of years, was worth only $9,000,000,' declared Senator Depew in a speech recently delivered in Brooklyn. Caesar, with the loot of all the world, managed to get together enough at one time to pay an indebtedness to people who did not dare to deny his demands of $21,000,000. Fifty years ago there was not a man in the world worth $50,000,000; there was only one man in the United States worth $5,000,000. A $100,000 was counted a fortune on which to retire, and $500,000 was thought to be the mark of a supremely rich man. Today, in Pittsburg, which is one of our minor cities, are 70 men worth over a $1,000,000 apiece. When Commodore Vanderbilt died in 1876 his fortune of a $100,000,000 had passed the mark never before reached, while now there are in our country several who are worth between $200,000,00 and $400,000,000, and a large number who have reached the $100,000,000 limit.

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

Further Report of Alabama's Constitutional Convention.

Twenty-Ninth Day.

Sheriffs Again Discussed—Resolution to Move Capital From Montgomery to Birmingham.

One hundred and thirty-one delegates attended the morning session today.

Mr. Hodges offered an ordinance to authorize the legislature to charter savings banks.

Mr. Jones offered a resolution to prevent amendments being proposed to the articles of the constitution when such amendments could be enacted into laws by the legislature.

Hon. Tom Long caused great laughter by introducing a resolution to remove the capital from Montgomery to Birmingham. The Montgomery papers have been "roasting" him about his fealty to party platform and he wants to get even.

Mr. Thompson offered an ordinance to provide for a tax on collateral inheritance of 2½ per cent on each $100, to be applied to public schools.

Governor Jones then moved to reconsider section 31 of the article on executive, which provides that the legislature shall provide for the family of any sheriff, deputy or member of a posse killed or disabled while defending a prisoner. The discussion occupied all the morning and went over until afternoon when only 105 delegates attended. The measure was finally defeated

Thirtieth Day.

Discussion Only—Invited to Monte Sano—Purchase of West Florida is Recommended.

The morning session today was attended by 141 delegates.

Another effort was made to provide for families of officers killed while defending pr soners, by giving the right of action for damages against the county. Three counties presented petitions to have the railroad commission elected by the people.

An important feature was the report of the committee on counties and county boundaries. Material changes were reported, one permitting the state to acquire additional territory as in the case of the proposed purchase of West Florida. New counties can only be created by a two-thirds vote of electors in territory to be altered.

The fertilizer tag matter was under discussion when the hour for adjournment arrived. The discussion was resumed at the afternoon session but nothing was accomplished.

The convention has been invited to adjourn in Montgomery and conclude its labors at the Hotel Monte Sano, near Huntsville. If the proposition is accepted, the delegates will be moved free of charge, furnished with a hall and given a minimum rate at the hotel.

Thirty-First Day.

A State Legislature of 105 Representatives—One Session Every Four Years—Two Tax Sections Adopted.

One hundred and forty-five delegates were present this morning and heard the report of the committee on legislative department. The principal changes proposed are:

Changing the name of the general assembly to the legislature; senators and representatives elected each four years; sessions of legislature held once in four years; the governor, auditor, treasurer and attorney-general shall prepare a revenue bill, and present it to the legislature every four years.

The committee on representation made a report that the house shall have 105 members and the senate thirty-five. It gives Jefferson ten members.

Mr. Ferguson presented a resolution congratulating Cuba upon the hopes of independence.

The committee on miscellaneous provisions made a report differing only from the present article in adding a section that the pay of state officers shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they were elected, and that a majority of each house be required to submit amendments to the constitution.

A petition was read from the sheriffs protesting against being made ineligible to succeed themselves.

Consideration of the tax ordinance was resumed, and Mr. White addressed the convention on his motion to prohibit any privilege tax in Alabama on any article of merchandise. Adjourned.

At three o'clock 137 delegates assembled for the afternoon session. Capt. White continued his address, but the matter was tabled. Sections one and two of the article on taxation were adopted. The first provides that taxes shall be levied in exact proportion to the value of property; the second that they shall not be levied by individuals or corporations.

Thirty-Second Day.

Mostly Discussion—State Debt not to be Increased—No Passes for The Newspaper Men.

Roll call showed 140 delegates of the convention in their seats this morning. The feature of the session was a resolution by Mr. Reynolds that no newspaper or representative should receive a pass from a railroad; and providing a penalty of $500 fo violating the ordinance.

The Convention then proceeded with the consideration of section three of the article on taxation and Governor Oates' amendment, which authorized the issue of $96,400 of bonds to improve the capitol and buy the remaining part of the capitol square, and to authorize the issuing of fifty year 4 per cent bonds to refund the debt of the state of $8,500,000 which falls due in 1906 This amendment limited the total amount of the state debt to $9,500,000.

The amendment was tabled while the section was adopted. The fourth section was under discussion when time for adjournment arrived. It was resumed at the afternoon session in which 119 delegates participated. The section limits the state tax rate to 65 cents on each $100. Its discussion occupied the entire afternoon, and no decision was reached prior to adjournment.

Thirty-Third Day.

Suffrage Committee Reports—Property, Poll Tax, Educational and Grandfather Provisions.

The committee on suffrage made its long expected report Saturday, which, as the clerk finished reading it, was greeted with applause. Its main features embody a temporary plan, allowing ex-soldiers and descendants to vote, and a permanent plan which goes into effect January, 1908. This embodies an educational test with an alternate property qualification of $300. A poll-tax of $1.50 must be paid and persons guilty of certain crimes are prohibited from voting. There are nineteen sections in the article. A minority report, signed by Committeemen White, Dent, Harrison and Oates, was submitted which objects to the section on qualifications.

Consideration of section 4 of the ordinance on taxation was resumed, the question being to fix the limit at seven mills. Judge Coleman addressed the convention against the proposition to reduce the tax limit, and Mr. Lowe had read letters from Governor, Jelks, Auditor Sowell and Treasurer White opposing a reduction.

Thirty-Fourth Day.

The Tax Limit Reduced to 65c. on the $100—Vote was Two to One—"Property Vote" Next.

Eighty-four delegates were present at the morning session of July 1, and 81 in the afternoon. Mr. Fletcher offered a resolution to consider the suffrage article after the article on taxation is disposed of.

The tax limit matter was then disposed of. After discussion, which continued into the afternoon, by a vote of 66 to 32 the tax limit was reduced to 65c. on $100.

Section five, relating to the "property vote" was under discussion when the convention adjourned.

The departure of the American cavalry and artillery from Pekin restores peace conditions in China as far as we are concerned. If civilization has any more burning or looting to do there it will have to do it without our help. When it was announced that our forces were about to leave Pekin the people of the district they had been policing signed a petition begging that they might be allowed to stay. Such a thing is a more legitimate source of pride to us than a victory in battle. Many nations have won battles, and the reputation of American troops as fighters cannot be affected by one trophy more or less. But it is not often in the history of the world that an invading army has been begged by the people it has subdued to stay with them. That is real glory, thinks the New York Journal.

Bresci, the assassin of King Humbert, had doubtless been brought to realize that a swift death at the hands of the executioner is not the extremest possible punishment for murder. The death penalty has been abolished in Italy, but the substitution of solitary confinement in a dark cell, without any occupation or opportunity to obtain sight of a human face or hear a human voice, cannot be regarded as having been an act of humanity toward those found guilty of capital crimes. A form of punishment which slowly but surely drives its victims to madness and suicide is more cruelly vindictive than the brief agony of death by the rope, the axe or the electric spark, states the Philadelphia Record.

The reckless youth on the bicycle is now taking his turn at being terrorized by the danger of being run down by an automobile.

A Murder at Warner—The Miners' Scale Re-adopted—Birmingham's New City Hall—Former Graduate Promoted—Industrial.

KILLED BY HIS FATHER-IN-LAW

Tom Mayberry was shot and mortally wounded by his father-in-law, Mr. English, at Warner mines, last Friday night. The ball entered the left side of the neck and lodged at the base of the brain. It seems that Mayberry was of violent temper, especially when drinking. He was under the influence of whisky, it is said, and went to Warner to secure his two children, who have made their home with their grandfather since their mother's death. English would not give them up and Mayberry became angry. Finally he attacked the father of his dead wife. The elder man, fearing for his life, reached for his pistol, and as his angry son-in-law advanced shot.

AGREED UPON SCALE.

There is now no fear of a strike among the iron miners. At the eleventh hour the old scale was agreed upon. The agreement will be submitted to the local miners for ratification and it is expected it will be signed on Tuesday, July 2nd. The scale is as follows: Miners to receive 45 cents a ton when the average price of all grades of iron is $9 or less per ton, with an increase of 2½ cents a ton for each 50 cents advance in the price of iron up to $11 a ton, when they shall receive 55 cents the maximum.

A NEW FACTORY.

A knitting mill will be erected in Birmingham shortly, for which a charter has already been applied. It will have a capacity of four hundred dozen pairs of hose a day, with provision to increase if the business advances. This will require a building 40x150 feet, and will furnish employment for a large number of people.

NARROW ESCAPE.

Friday afternoon Bert Tillery and Miss Bertha Huten were at a swing in Tuscaloosa when the tree to which the swing was attached was struck by lightning. By what seems a miracle they were not killed, but so shocked as to be rendered unconscious. The tree was shattered and a dog at its foot was instantly killed.

CORNER STONE LAID.

The laying of the corner stone o Birmingham's new city hall took place Saturday, June 29th, with Masonic ceremonies. On account of the inability of Governor Jelks to attend, the oration was delivered by Colonel Sumter Lea. In 1871 a cotton field was in cultivation where the city hall is now building.

A NEW PROFESSOR.

Malcolm C. Burke, of Montgomery, a graduate with highest honors in 1899, has been tendered the position by Dr. W. S. Wyman as assistant in the chair of Latin. Mr. Burke went to Harvard and made a special study of Greek and Latin for two years and cently graduated in these courses at that institution.

RATES REDUCED.

A reduction of 50 cents per ton on export iron will go into effect on July 15, and will be the cause for large increase in the export shipments of blast furnace products. At present there is but little iron shipped for export from this district.

BIRMINGHAM MAN IN LUCK.

Mr. John D. Tyson will come in for a fortune of $8,000,000, according to a story from Australia of relatives dead there. Mr. Tyson is a car repairer on the Southern, and the father of Mrs. J. M. Turnham who shot Attorney Harsh a few days since.

WATKINS WAS WINNER.

F. P. Watkins, of Birmingham, representing Howard College, won the oratorical contest at the Chautauqua at Anniston last Saturday over speakers from the University of Alabama, the Auburn Institute and the Southern University of Greensboro. Watkins won at Talladega last year. The prize is fifty dollars in gold and a trip to Mount Hagin, Tenn.

TWO MURDERERS EXECUTED.

Frank Miller, white, and Alonzo Williams, colored, were hanged in the Jefferson county jail Friday morning, June 28. The former was convicted of the murder of a Birmingham policeman on March 27, 1900; the latter of killing a fellow convict in Pratt Mines. Both died easily. Miller protested his innocence to the last and Williams admitted his guilt and died in a religious frenzy. Miller was one of the shrewdest of criminals, a noted safe-blower, and had nearly effected his escape from the walls which witnessed his death.

LAWYERS ADJOURN.

The State Bar Association adjourned Saturday after a two days' meeting at Montgomery. The election of officers resulted as follows: Edward L. Russell, president; James Weatherly, Edward DeGraffenreid, A. H. Alson, J. T. Kirk, and P. A. McDaniel, vice presidents; Secretary and treasurer, Alex Troy. A resolution was passed that any lawyer who attempts to create the impression that he can unduly influence the judge of any court in the dicision of any case is unworthy of the profession. The next meeting place was not selected.

OIL INDICATIONS.

Prominent Tennessee capitalists have taken options on the mineral and oil rights on nearly 10,000 acres of land in the northern part of Madison county. The lands, though worthless for farming purposes, are rich in iron ore and oil indications. It is the purpose of the capitalists to bore for oil within the next year. Interest is growing in the probability that oil can be found in paying quantity. A well was bored several years ago and a small quantity of oil was struck a short distance from the surface.

DEATH IN A WRECK.

A wheel under a freight car in a train on the Alabama Great Southern railroad, broke near Powderly, and caused a wreck Friday. Eight cars were piled up and wrecked. Brakeman C. M. Fuller, a white man aged 26, was on top of a car, and when the wreck occurred he was thrown under the train and crushed to death. There was not much merchandise in the train, and the loss will not be very great. Fuller leaves a wife and two children.

OFFICER RESIGNS.

Col. Henry B. Foster, commanding a regiment of the Alabama National Guard, has resigned his commission. Colonel Foster states his reason for resigning presure of personal business. Lieut. Col. A. A. Wiley will carry the regiment into camp at Eufaula, July 6, and the successor to Colonel Foster will be chosen. It then is probable that Wiley will receive the unanimous support of the regiment for promotion.

ANOTHER ALONZO WILLIAMS.

Tom Downey killed Lindsay Spradling with a pick in Coalburg mines Saturday. Both are negroes, serving fifteen months and twenty-five years respectively. Downey claims self-defense. The case is almost an exact parallel of the Alonzo Williams affair which culminated in his execution last week.

PRESIDENCY SETTLED.

Dr. Wm. Stokes Wyman was elected president of the Tuscaloosa University last Wednesday. The selection was not a surprise. It seems to be satisfactory to the faculty and students.

SEVEN GRADUATED.

The first public commencement of the Hospital Training School for Nurses at the Bryce Hospital was held June 28th. A large number were present. Dr. Searcy delivered an address in which he gave a history of the establishment of a hospital for the insane in Alabama when, through the efforts of Miss Dorothy Dix and Robert Jemison, the legislature passed a bill signed by Governor Collier in 1852. The school was established in 1895 Dr. Searcy presented certificates to seven graduates. The course is a two-year one and the best northern school methods are employed.

REVENGE SOUGHT.

About ten days ago S. J. McGowan, of Mobile, was compelled to kill a negro in self defense. Saturday Mr. McGowan was decoyed into a place of woods and an attempt to murder him was made. The sheriff went to the scene with hounds and seven negroes are under arrest. The man attacked made a plucky fight and killed one of his assailants.

BILL ARP'S LETTE[R]

Prevalence of Suicide Astounds Bartow Philosopher.

INDICATES MANY DISEASED MIND[S]

[illegible] Suggests Various Schemes [illegible] Recreation to Divert One's Thoughts From Self Murder.

The increasing prevalence of suicide indicates an unhealthy condition of mind and body and I have thought that if the man would quit thinking about his troubles and go to chopping wood or digging in the garden, or even go hunting and get up a good circulation he would feel better and conclude to live on a while longer. The body affects the mind and when the blood gets thick and sluggish and the secretions become stagnant the mind gets diseased and morbid and the notions are out of tune and the man actually believes he would be happier and more at peace in death. It is strange that a man of education or refinement would entertain such an unreasonable hope. What did the school master of Bethan accomplish by killing McNeil and himself? Where is the school teacher now? When two states fight a duel and both are whipped how do their spirits meet in the other world? Do they shake hands after the fight, for, of course, they are in heaven! What does the young man accomplish by killing his sweetheart and then himself? Are they then forever separated? What does anybody gain by suicide? An exchange says: "Is it not better to bear the ills we have than fly to others we know not of?" Why not run from yourself? Run to the woods, keep on running—jump the creeks, swim the rivers, get wet and cold—work in the garden, dig up the wood, mount a horse and ride furiously—anything to divert the mind from its train of thought. My good old father was afflicted with rheumatism and when he had an acute, agonizing pains coming he would rouse up and limp away to the farm, and would work faster and faster as the pains increased and would actually make himself ashamed and they would leave him for a day or two. To keep the body in a good, normal condition, the mind must be exercised. Sedentary occupations are not healthy for men. Even women should fly around the house with a broom or wash the windows occasionally, or dig among the flowers. It will not do for them to sit down all the time. I am sorry for the unmarried girls who have to run the machine all the day long and get no healthy exercise except for the annoyances. When they get married and the babies come along they are safe, for the little children give them diversion enough. A mother with a babe in her arms never thinks of suicide. Even if her husband is a brute to her or is a drunkard, she will live on and on for the sake of the babe. We note that most of the suicides occur among the young men. Many are caused from intemperance or disappointed love or failure to make money fast, or being caught in embezzlement (alias stealing). Othello killed himself because he found out that he had wrongfully killed his wife, and Shakespeare says "he was great of heart." I reckon he was, considering that he was a Moor and did not believe in hereafter. It was the best thing he did, the most heroic thing that he could do. It was the very intensity of manhood and repentance and has no parallel in modern suicides, for most all of them are selfish or revengeful. It was like the Harikiri of Saul, or of the ancient generals when defeated in battle.

The most alarming feature about the suicides of our young men is the notion that they are not believers in the Christian religion. No sane man would take his own life if he believes in heaven and hell and a future state of rewards and punishments. He will be afraid to. The influence of modern infidelity on the youthful mind has much to do with it, for a great deal of it is mixed with atheism and infidelity. Even some of the standard writers, as Byron and Disraeli, had left their baneful impression. The latter threw a dark shadow over life and says that "youth is a blunder, manhood a struggle and old age a regret."

It is not far better to take a more cheerful view of life and say, like the poet, Horace Smith:

"The world is very lovely! Oh, my God,
How I thank thee that I live."

Or to say like Longfellow—

"Life is real—life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal."

It is easy to diagnose a poet's temperament or a philosopher's by his writings—some are gloomy and some are bright and cheerful. I was ruminating about these young men who have just graduated at my alma mater and the other home colleges, and wondering how many of them would prove a success in life and twenty years hence exclaim, with the poet, "Oh, God, I thank Thee that I live." Twenty-four years ago I was at Athens, and the class of '47, and of the forty-two then living there are now but half a dozen left. Many of them lived and died and made no signs. Some of them were trouble and some made good citizens, good husbands and fathers; and

BILL ARP'S LETTER

Evidence of Suicide Astounds Bartow Philosopher.

DISCUSSES MANY DISEASED MINDS

Also Suggests Various Schemes of Recreation to Divert One's Thoughts From Self Murder.

The increasing prevalence of suicide indicates an unhealthy condition of mind and body and I have thought if the man would just stop thinking and go to chopping wood or digging in the garden or even digging ditches and get up a good appetite and sweat out the poisons he would be better and more lud' in his whole nature. The body influences the mind and when the blood gets thick and sluggish the secretions become stagnant, the brain gets diseased and morbid and the conditions are out of time and the man does not realize it. I believe he would find relief even in death. It is a strange thought that a man of education or refinement would contemplate such an unnatural act. What is it the school boy means when he says he will commit suicide by kill Mr. Smith and himself? Where did he get such a notion? When he comes to a duel and both are killed how do their spirits meet in the next world? Do they shake hands and renew the fight? Of course they do not. What does the man propose to accomplish by killing his body and then himself? Are they then forever separated? Does anybody gain by suicide? Daniel says: "Is it not better to be a live dog than a dead lion?" Why not run away from yourself? Run to the woods, keep in running, jump the creeks, swim the rivers, get wet, tired and hungry in the garden, dig, chop wood, rub off a horse and furiously gallop to divert the mind from its train of thought. My grandfather was afflicted with somnambulism and when he felt the symptoms coming on would rouse up and limp away to take for the farm and would walk faster and faster as the pains increased and would actually make him ashamed and they would leave him for a day or two. To keep the mind in a good normal condition, the body must be exercised. Sedentary occupations are not healthy for men, even women should fly around the house with a broom or wash the windows occasionally or dig among the flowers. It will not do for them to sit and sew all the time. I am sorry for the unmarried girls who have to run a machine all the day long and get no healthy exercise except for the ankle bones. When they get married and the babies come along they are pretty safe for the little children give them another diversion enough. A mother with a babe in her arms never thinks of suicide. Even if her husband is addicted to her or is a drunkard, she will hold on and on for the sake of the child. We note that most of the suicides occur among the young men. They are afraid from intemperance or disappointed love or failure to make money fast enough to be being caught in embezzlement (as a strainge). Othello killed himself because he found out that he had wrongfully killed his wife, and Shakespeare says he was great of heart. I reckon he was considering that he was a Moor and did not believe in a hereafter. It was the best thing he did, the most heroic thing that he could do. It was the very intensity of grief and repentance and has no parallel in modern suicides, for most all of them are selfish or revengeful. It was like the Hamlets of Saul, or of the ancient generals when defeated in battle.

The most alarming feature about these suicides of our young men is the indication that they are not believers in Christian religion. No sane man will take his own life if he believes in heaven and hell and a future state of rewards and punishments. He will be afraid to. The influence of modern education on the youthful mind has much to do with it, for a great deal of it is tainted with atheism and infidelity. Even some of the standard writers, as Hume and Darwin, had left their bad impression. The latter threw a dark shadow over life and says that "youth is a blunder, manhood a struggle and old age a regret."

Is it not far better to take a more hopeful view of life and say, like the poet, Horace Smith:

"The world is still lovely! Oh, my God!
I thank Thee that I live."

Or, as Longfellow—

"Life is real, life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal."

It is easy to diagnose a poet's temperament or a philosopher's by his writings—some are gloomy and some are bright and cheerful. I was ruminating about these young men who have just graduated at my alma mater and the other home colleges, and wondering how many of them would prove a success in life and twenty years hence exclaim with the poet, "Oh, my God I thank Thee that I live." Fifty-four years ago I was at Athens, in the class of 47 and of the forty-two then living there are now but half a dozen left. Many of them lived and died and made no signs. Some of them saw trouble and some made good citizens, good husbands and fathers; and just so history repeats itself all along the generations. It grieved me that I could not attend the centennial and commune with the alumni and rejoice with the young and feel lonely with the old. Then there is old college and new college, and the chapel and the campus and the two halls that are still unchanged. I wonder how many boys have occupied the old room that Briscoe and I lived in for two long years? I saw it in the picture and felt like it was still my room. The ailanthus trees (by a misnomer called the tree of heaven) grew close to our windows and extended their nauseating odors to the dormitory where we slept, and the boys all along the line complained but the faculty said it would soon pass away and the trees were imported from China, the Celestial Empire, and they were called the trees of heaven. So one dark night the boys (not I) got axes and girdled them and they died and went to heaven in China, where they came from. For some months I roomed in new college, and so did our tutor, who was cross and never smiled, for he was an old bachelor—peace to his ashes. He wouldent let me nor Chess Howard play on the flute after study hours at night, nor let Ben Mosely nor Dick Parmer play on the fiddle. Said it annoyed him, and so some of the boys (not I) got some old cannon balls from the armory and away in the dead hour of night, when deep sleep falleth upon a man or a tutor, they rolled a six-pounder along the long hall 200 feet right by his door, which was about midway. When it got to the other end another boy slipped out and rolled it back again, and this rolling and rumbling was kept up for a time until there happened just what they thought would happen. The tutor had opened a crack in his door, and when he heard the ball coming for the fifth time, he slipped out suddenly and stopped it with his foot and picked it up and took it in his room. That was just what the boys (not I) wanted, for they had another one in the fire getting hot. In due time they took it in the shovel and sent it slowly down the hallway, and it stopped not far from his door. Quickly he stepped out and the light from his room showed him the ball. He seized it with his right hand and straightway dropped it and used some language that was unbecoming, and retreated to his room. The next day his hand was tied up in a white handkerchief, which was a kind of flag of truce, for he was much more considerate to us and seemed to like music. I never perpetrated much mischief while in college, but I was an apt scholar to look on and enjoy all the fun. Chess Howard was an expert and could play ball better than anybody, especially a hot cannon ball. Chess came to see us some time ago and after awhile asked me and my wife to give them some music. And so she seated herself at the piano and I took my flute and asked what he would like. And he said play that good old piece that we used to call "Sallie Baxter" when we went serenading in Athens. So we played it, and before we were aware of it Chess had slipped his own flute out of his pocket and was tooting along behind me. Sallie was our college sweetheart, but we dident get her, for a Bird flew there and she followed him off to Baltimore and is living there yet. But we never thought of suicide.

But I forbear. It is sweet and it's sad to recall the memories of '45, '46 and '47, and I would have felt lost and lonely in Athens. It was a college then. It is a great university now, and many changes have come over it, and we old veterans have to keep up with the procession whether we like the modern methods or not. They have got intercollegiate baseball in the curriculum now and I reckon it is to keep the boys from committing suicide. It diverts their minds from the strain of trigonometry and calculus and conic sections. Progress is the order of the day in colleges as in everything else. One hundred and fifty years ago old Dr. Johnson said to Boswell, "In our great schools there is less flogging than formerly. Consequently, less is learned there. So what the boys get at one end they lose at the other." Now there is no flogging anywhere, and the teachers and professors are thankful if they escape it from the boys.—Bill Arp, in Atlanta Constitution.

"The Yankee Peril" continues in Europe. Almost the whole press, from the Balkans to Sweden and Scotland, is printing articles betraying alarm over the industrial and financial menace of the United States. In the meantime, the exports from the United States continue to increase, and by the end of the fiscal year promise to reach the unprecedented sum of $1,500,000,000 in value. For the 12 months ending with February, the figures were $1,430,194,985. The excess of exports over imports shows an even greater increase, being $492,234,904 for the eight months ending with February, against $304,219,807 in the same months of the preceding year. It is estimated that the exports for eights months of 1901 will reach $1,012,185,374, against $522,960,380 for imports. In other words, the American people will sell to foreigners nearly thrice as much as they will buy.

The supreme court of Massachusetts decided the other day that the use of voting machines at elections is not illegal and there is a good prospect of their early adoption by the cities and towns of the state.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

A new method of blasting without report or shock has been devised. It consists of first charging the holes on the line of the cleavage of the rock with steam to heat it; then introducing a charge of liquid air to suddenly chill it. The sudden contraction of the rock by the liquid air makes it brittle and easy to remove.

The belief that the diamond is produced in the "blue ground" rock of South Africa is probably a mistaken one, according to Professor Bonney. He has carefully examined some blue-ground bowlders containing diamonds and found them water-worn, and composed of garnetiferous rock. Two of the specimens showed the diamond apparently embedded in the garnet, which leads the Professor to call attention to the very close relation that evidently exists between the two stones. The Professor concluded that the diamond does not originate in the blue ground, but is there as a derivative of older rocks.

Migrations of rats have been known, also of squirrels, the latter moving over the country in thousands. Many fishes are affected by reasons of activity. The writer once witnessed on the Maine coast the arrival of a devastating horde of dog fishes or small sharks two or three feet in length. The day previous not one was seen, but suddenly they appeared like an army. The cod and haddock fishing of the locality was completely ruined by the voracious throng, and the fishermen began to fish for the small sharks, which were converted into dressing for farms, while the livers were made into Aluminum, or aluminium, as it is more properly called, has not been used in the manufacturers long enough for its qualities to be generally known, and metal workers frequently ask about its strength. Under transverse strain it is not very rigid, but it will bend nearly double without breaking. Its tensile strength is greatly increased by forging and pressing at a temperature of 600 degrees Fahrenheit and if alloyed with nickel it is much stronger than when pure. Cast aluminium is about equal in strength to cast iron in tension, but in resisting compression it is comparatively weak.

Consul Nelson of Bergen is the author of a report that a Copenhagen chemist, after experimenting for several years, has invented a cheap substitute for rubber, which he calls "solicum." It is produced from asphalt, and can be used for the manufacture of linoleum, rubbers, insulators, etc. It is also claimed that the material can be used as a paint, in all colors, and that it is absolutely waterproof. The immense value which a cheap and good substitute for rubber would have has led to a great number of experiments during recent years with various substances, none of which, however, up to date, have shaken the pre-eminent position which rubber holds as an insulator and waterproofer.

In the report of the director of the Peabody museum of Harvard university—Prof. Putnam—there is a paragraph on the famous Calaveras skull, which is now in the possession of the museum. Prof. Putnam spent a week in a careful study of the site where the skull was found and reports that he is at this time only prepared to state that after a careful sifting and cross-questioning of all the stories told at Angel's Camp as to the finding of the skull, he has come to the conclusion that these stories "are not worthy of consideration as evidence." Samples of the materials from the shaft of the Mattison mine were brought to Cambridge for study. Mining work in the auriferous gravels of Tuolumine county has recently been again undertaken and fragments of implements and bones have been found, it is said. It is likely that more evidence on the antiquity of man in California will soon be forthcoming.

Trolley Influence Overcome.

At a magnetic observatory at Parc Saint Maur a successful method of compensating for the influence of a trolley line about two miles distant has been worked out. This modification of the usual instruments is of great importance as it has been evident for some time past that the accuracy of the recording magnetic instruments are quite simple, and, it is asserted, permit of the most sensitive indications of the earth's magnetic field.

The foreign disturbances are suppressed by the use of bar magnets placed below the suspended instrument needles by the weghting of the needles and by a copper damper placed close to the face of each needle. Minute changes in the earth's magnetism are as faithfully recorded on the modified instrument as on one of normal form, while the influences of the industrial currents are very materially reduced.

The Honest Watchman.

The owner of a factory found his night watchman asleep while upon duty and discharged him on the spot. The man returned next day and asked to be appointed day watchman at a salary of $10 a week.

"But I do not require a day watchman," said the factory owner, "and why should I pay you $10 a week for doing nothing?"

"Well," replied the former watchman, "I just think you're getting mighty stingy all of a sudden. You used to pay me $20 a week for doing nothing."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

DISCOURSE BY THE EMINENT DIVINE LAST SUNDAY.

Subject: The Importance of Promptness—Lost Opportunities—Victory Over Obstacles—Benefits of Having to Struggle Hard For a Living.

(Copyright 1901.)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—From a passage of Scripture unobserved by most readers Dr. Talmage in this discourse shows the importance of prompt action in anything we have to do for ourselves or others; text, Ecclesiastes xi. 4, "He that observeth the wind shall not sow."

What do you find in this packed sentence of Solomon's monologue? I find in it a farmer at his front door examining the weather. It is seedtime. His fields have been plowed and harrowed. The wheat is in the barn in sacks, ready to be taken afield and scattered. Now is the time to sow. But the wind is not favorable. It may blow up a storm before night, and he may get wet if he starts out for the sowing. Or it may be a long storm that will wash out the seed from the soil. Or there may have been a long drought, and the wind may continue to blow dry weather. The parched fields may not take in the grain, and the birds may pick it up, and the labor as well as the seed may be wasted. So he gives up the work for that day and goes back into the house and waits to see what it will be on the morrow. On the morrow the wind is still in the wrong direction, and for a whole week, and for a month. Did you ever see such a long spell of bad weather? The lethargic and overcautious and dilatory agriculturist allows the season to pass without sowing, and no sowing, of course no harvest. That is what Solomon means when he says in my text, "He that observeth the wind shall not sow."

As much in our times as in Solomonic times there is abroad a fatal hesitancy—a disposition to let little things stop us—a ruinous adjournment. We all want to do some good in the world, but how easily we are halted in our endeavors. Perhaps we are solicitors for some great charity. There is a good man who has large means, and he is accustomed to give liberally to asylums, to hospitals, to reform organizations, to schools, to churches, to communities desolated with flood or devastated with fires. But that good man, like many a good man, is mercurial in his temperament. He is depressed by atmospheric changes. He is always victimized by the east wind. For this or that reason you postpone the charitable solicitation. Meanwhile the suffering that you wish to alleviate does its awful work, and the opportunity for relief is past. If the wind had been from the west or northwest, you would have entered the philanthropist's counting room and sought the gift, but the wind was blowing from the east or northeast and you did not make the attempt, and you thoroughly illustrated my text, "He that observeth the wind shall not sow."

There comes a dark Sabbath morning. The pastor looks out of the window and sees the clouds gather and then discharge their burdens of rain. Instead of a full church it will be a handful of people with wet feet and the dripping umbrella at the doorway or in the end of the pew. The pastor has prepared one of his best sermons. It has cost him great research, and he has been much in prayer while preparing it. He puts the sermon aside for a clear day and talks platitudes and goes home quite depressed, but at the same time feeling that he has done his duty. He did not realize that in that small audience there were at least two persons who ought to have had better treatment. One of those hearers was a man in crisis of struggle with evil appetite. A carefully prepared sermon under the divine blessing might have been to him complete victory, the fires of sin would have been extinguished, and his keen and brilliant mind would have been consecrated at the gospel ministry, and he would have been a mighty evangel, and tens of thousands of souls would have under the spell of his Christian eloquence given up sin and started a new life, and throughout all the heavens there would have been congratulation and hosanna, and after many ages of eternity had passed there would be celebration among the ransomed of what was accomplished one stormy Sunday in a church on earth under a mighty gospel sermon delivered to fifteen or twenty people. But the crisis I speak of was not properly met. The man in struggle with evil habit heard that stormy day no word that moved him. He went out in the rain uninvited and unhelped back to his evil way and won to his overthrow. Had it been a sunshiny Sabbath he would have heard something worth hearing. But the wind blew from a stormy direction that Sabbath day. That gospel husbandman noticed it and acted upon its suggestion and may discover some day his great mistake. He had a sackful of the finest of the wheat, but he withheld it, and some day he will find when the whole story is told, that he was a vivid illustration of the truth of my text, "He that observeth the wind shall not sow."

There was another person in that stormy Sunday audience that deserved something better from that pastor than extemporized nothingness. It was a mother who was half awakened to a sense of responsibility in regard to her household. She had begun to question herself as to whether it would not be better to introduce into her home a religion that would decide aright the destiny of her sons and daughters. Her home had so far been controlled only by worldly principles. She had dared the riot of the elements that morning and had found her way to church, hoping to hear something that would help her to decide the domestic question which was to her a solicitude. A good, strong sermon under the divine blessing would have led her into the kingdom of God and afterward her whole family. The children, whether they became farmers or mechanics or merchants or artists or men of learned profession or women at the head of households, would have done their work in a Christian way, and after lives of usefulness on earth would have taken thrones in heaven. It would have been a whole family saved for time and saved for eternity. But the pastor had adjourned the strong and effective discourse to a clear Sunday. The mother went home chilled in body, mind and soul and concluded not to trouble herself or her household about the future, and to let to-morrow take care of itself and keep on doing as they had been doing. No formation of thorough Christian character in the lives of those growing up boys and girls. They will go out into the world to meet its vicissitudes without any sublime re-enforcement of the gospel. What a pity it was that he did not put down the manuscript of his well prepared sermon on the Bible if he preached from notes or pour it out of his soul if he had lodged it there through careful preparation! No. He allowed that opportunity, which could never return, to pass into eternity unimproved. He observed by the way the rain dashed against the windows of the parsonage and the windows of the church that the wind was from the east or the northeast, and he did not sow or sowed that which was not worth sowing.

In all departments of life there are those hindered by the wind of public opinion. It has become an aphorism in politics and in all great movements, "He is waiting to see which way the wind blows." And it is no easy thing to defy public opinion, to be run upon by newspapers, to be overhauled in social circles, to be anathematized by those who heretofore were your friends and admirers. It requires a heroism which few possess. Yet no great reformatory or elevating movement has ever been accomplished until some one was willing to defy what the world should think or say or do. But there have been men and women of that kind. They stand all up and down the corridors of history, examples for us to follow. Charles Sumner in the United States Senate, Alexander H. Stephens in Georgia convention, Savonarola staking his life in time of persecution, Martin Luther fighting the battle for religious freedom against the mightiest anathemas that were ever hurled, William Carey leading the missionary movement to save a heathen world while churches denounced him as a fanatic and with attempting an impossibility, Jenner, the hero of medicine, caricatured for his attempt by vaccination to beat back the worst disease that smote the nations. They who watch the wind of public opinion will not sow. It is an uncertain indication, and is apt to blow the wrong way.

"Let us have war with England, if needs be," said the most of the people of our Northern States in 1861, when Mason and Slidell, the distinguished Southerners, had been taken by our navy from the British steamer Trent, and the English Government resented the act of our Government in stopping one of their ships. "Give up those prisoners," said Great Britain. "No," said the almost unanimous opinion of the North, "do not give them up. Let us have war with England rather than surrender them." Then William H. Seward, Secretary of State, faced one of the fiercest storms of public opinion ever seen in this or any other country. Seeing that the retention of these two men was of no importance to our country and that their retention would put Great Britain and the United States into immediate conflict, said, "We give them up." They were given up, and through the resistance of popular clamor by that one man a world-wide calamity was averted.

How many there are who give too much time to watching the weather vane and studying the barometer! Make up your mind what you are going to do and then go ahead and do it. There always will be hindrances. It is a moral disaster if you allow prudence to overmaster all the other graces. The Bible makes more of courage and faith and perseverance than it does of caution. It is not once a year that the great ocean steamers fail to sail at the appointed time because of the storm signals. Let the weather bureau prophesy what hurricane or cyclone it may, next Wednesday, next Thursday, next Saturday the steamers will put out from New York and Philadelphia and Boston harbors and will reach Liverpool and Southampton and Glasgow and Bremen, their arrival as certain as their embarkation. They cannot afford to consult the wind, nor can you in your life voyage.

Young men, you have planned what you are going to be and do in the world, but you are waiting for circumstances to become more favorable. You are, like the farmer in the text, observing the wind. Better start now. Obstacles will help you if you conquer them. Cut your way through. Peter Cooper, the millionaire philanthropist, who will bless all succeeding centuries with the institution he founded, worked five years for $25 a year and his board. Henry Wilson, the Christian statesman who commanded the United States Senate with the gavel of the Vice-Presidency, wrote of his early days: "Want sat by my cradle. I know what it is to ask a mother for bread when she has none to give. I left my home at ten years of age and served an apprenticeship of eleven years, receiving a month's schooling each year and at the end of eleven years of hard work a yoke of oxen and six sheep, which brought me $84. In the first month after I was twenty-one years of age I went into the woods, drove a team and cut mill logs. I arose in the morning before daylight and worked hard till after dark, and received the magnificent sum of $8 for the month's work. Each of these dollars looked as large to me as the moon looks to-night." Wonderful Henry Wilson! But that was not his original name. He changed his name because he did not want on him the blight of a drunken father. As the Vice-President stood in my pulpit in Brooklyn, making the last address he ever made and commended the religion of Christ to the young men of that city, I thought to myself, "You yourself are the sublimest spectacle I ever say of victory over obstacles." For thirty years the wind blew the wrong way, yet he did not observe the wind, but kept right on sowing.

Just call over the names of the men and women who have done most for our poor old world, and you will call the names of those who had mobs after them. They were shunned by the elite; they were cartooned by the satirists; they lived on food which you and I would not throw to a kennel.

Many of us who are now preachers of the gospel, or medical practitioners, or members of the bar, or merchants, or citizens in various kind of business had very poor opportunity at the start because we had it too easy—far too easy.

If it were proper to do so, and you should stand in any board of bank directors, in any board of trade, in any Legislature, State or national, and ask all who were brought up in luxury and ease to lift their hand, here and there a hand might be lifted, but ask all those who had an awful hard time at the start to lift their hands, and most of the hands would be lifted.

Columbus, by calculation, made up his mind that there must be a new hemisphere somewhere to balance the old hemisphere or it would be a lop-sided world. And I have found out, not by calculation, but by observation, that there is a great success for you somewhere to balance your great struggle. Do not think your case is peculiar. The most favored have been pelted. The mobs smashed the windows of the Duke of Wellington while his wife lay dead in the house.

But my subject takes another step. Through medical science, and dentistry that has improved the world's mastication, and stronger defense against climatic changes, and better understanding of the laws of health, human life has been greatly prolonged. But a centenarian is still a wonder. How many people do you know a hundred years old? I do not know one. We talk of a century as though it were a very long reach of time. But what is one century on earth compared with centuries that we are to live somewhere, somehow—ten centuries, a million centuries, a quintillion of centuries? We are all determined to get ready for the longer life we are to live after our exit from things sublunary. We are waiting for more propitious opportunity. We have too much business to attend to now or too much pleasure to allow anything to interfere with its brilliant progress. We are waiting until the wind blows in the right direction. We are going to sow, and sow the very best grain, and we are going to raise an eternal harvest of happiness. We like what you say about heaven, and we are going there, and at the right time we will get ready, but my lungs are sound, my digestion is good, the examining physician of the life insurance company says my heart beats just the right number of times a minute, and I am cautious about sitting in a draft, and I observe all the laws of hygiene, and my father and mother lived to be very old, and I come of a long-lived family.

So we adjourn and postpone until, like the farmer suggested by my text, we allow the seedtime to pass and sudden pneumonia or a reckless bicycle or an ungoverned automobile puts us out of life with all its magnificent opportunities of deciding aright the question of everlasting residence. A Spanish proverb says, "The road of By and By leads to the town of Never."

Whether in your life it is a scute wind or a north wind, a west wind or an east wind that is now blowing, do you not feel like saying: "This whole subject I now decide. Lord God, through Thy Son Jesus Christ, my Saviour, I am Thine forever. I throw myself, reckless of everything else, into the fathomless ocean of Thy mercy."

THE SABBATH SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JULY 7

Subject: God, the Creator of All Things. Gen. i., 1 to ii., 3—Golden Text, Gen. i., 1—Memory Verses, 26-27—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

1. "In the beginning." The discoveries of geology prove the globe to have existed at an indefinitely remote period before the creation of man, that is, long before the six days' work so distinctly described. It has been supposed by some that "in the beginning" was the commencement of the first day, and of course only about 6000 years ago. But no phrase could be more indefinite as to time. It means "in former duration," "of old." "God." The Bible does not undertake to prove the existence of God, but at the very outset His existence is assumed as a fact. "Created." The primary sense of the word is that of the divine act of absolute creation out of nothing. Rom. 4: 17. Heb. 11: 3.

2. "The earth was waste and void" (R. V.) There was confusion and disorder. The history of creation is confined simply to the first two verses. The apparent conflict of this chapter with geology has arisen from the mistake of supposing it to be a narrative of creation, when all but the first two verses is an account of the adaptation of the created material of the earth as an abode for man. "Moved." God proceeded to bring order out of the matter that was existing in a chaotic state.

3. "Let there be light." Nothing can be conceived more dignified than this form of expression. It shows God's authority and power.

5. "The first day." There has always been much discussion as to whether the days referred to in this chapter were twenty-four-hour days or indefinite periods. Certainly the first three days could not have been natural days, for the sun had not yet appeared. The term "day" is frequently used to designate periods of indefinite time (see 2 Pet. 3: 8; Luke 19: 42), but these days were probably the same length as our days at the present time.

6. "Firmament." Expanse; properly something beaten out. The space above the earth.

10. "Earth—seas." By this separation both were rendered useful. The earth was prepared for the numerous living creatures. It requires this great surface of water "to yield a sufficiency of vapors for the purpose of cooling the atmosphere and watering the earth." "God saw that it was good." This was the judgment which God pronounced upon His own works. This clause is often added to show that all the disorders, evil and hurtful qualities that are now in creation, are not to be charged to God, but to man's sin, which hath corrupted their nature and perverted their use.

11. "Bring forth grass," etc. In these general expressions we are to understand that all kinds of vegetable productions are included. Thus, before God formed any living creature to abide upon the earth, He wisely provided for its sustenance, "Whose seed is in itself." Either in the root, or branch, or bud, or fruit; which is sufficient in itself for the propagation of its kind.

16. "God made two great lights." The moon is referred to as a great light merely because it appears great to those on the earth.

26. "Let us make man." God the Father unites with the Son and Spirit. This was the last act in the work of creation. Man was "created," not "evolved from some other animal." Man was created about 6000 years ago, and in this there is perfect harmony with science, which shows that the appearance of man upon the earth is comparatively recent. "Image—likeness." It was man's soul that was made in the image of God. This image consisted of knowledge, righteousness and true holiness, or, in the words of Dr. Hannah, "Light in the understanding, rectitude in the will, sanctity in the purposes and affections." A more detailed account of the creation of man is made in the next chapter in which is made clear the distinction between body and soul, between the animal man and the spiritual man. The body was made of the dust of the earth, and this is true not only of the body of Adam, but of the bodies of all his descendants. But an absolutely perfect body without a soul would not be a man. It was only when God gave the body He had formed from the dust a living soul, formed in His own image, that the creation of man took place. The soul was not evolved, it was created. Man is the son of God.

27. "Male and female." The story of woman's creation is given in chapter 2: 21-24. Woman was created by taking a rib, or a part of the man's side, for the original word may mean either, and forming it into the woman.

28. "God blessed them." He gave them His favor, His care for their posterity and their good, so that it would be a blessing, a happiness to live. And the divine benediction is still essential to the ideal life, which is the only true life here below. "Be fruitful." The first family was founded with one husband and one wife. It was God's purpose to fill the earth with happy beings, enjoying the good things He had made. Children are a great blessing in the family. They tend to remove selfishness, to develop benevolence, patience, love, hope and self-government. "Subdue it." Bring it under cultivation. The labor of subduing the earth has stimulated invention, and is the origin and head of civil society. "Have dominion." Man has been aptly described as the creature who was to be God's representative, clothed with authority, and who should rule as visible head of the world.

29. "Have given you." The world is a divine gift to man, valuable and increasing in value, expressing God's love, teaching His truth, sustaining His life, ministering to every sense. "Every herb—for meat." In this and the ensuing verse the death of any creature does not appear in the original design of God. Man was neither to eat the flesh of brute animals, nor were these to prey upon each other. It was only after the fall that such things were at all provided for.

34. "God saw." Seeming to pause to inspect His work. "Very good." Superlatively good, perfect. Nothing could be added, or diminished; no change, alteration or modification could be made without marring God's handiwork. The creation was "good as showing God's love to His creatures, and good as the expression of His nature and character."

1. "Thus." The division of the chapter should be at verse 4. "Were finished." His work of creation was completed.

2. "Rested." Not because God was weary, but because the work planned was done. We are living in the seventh day of divine rest.

3. "Blessed the seventh day." It has been impartially demonstrated that physical law demands that we rest one day in seven.

A German governess reports that in her country history is taught on a broader basis than in the United States. Instead of studying each nation separately, the pupils learn what is happening in all parts of the civilized world during a given period. They thus comprehend more easily the close relationship of one nation to another.

FIRECRACKERS.

How They Are Now Manufactured In the United States.

A few years ago all the firecrackers with which American boys and girls celebrated the Fourth of July were brought over from China. But Yankee ingenuity soon found a way to make its own firecrackers, and now the Chinese actually celebrate with the fireworks of the finer kinds sent over from America, says the Chicago Record.

The Chinese probably made firecrackers thousands of years ago. They were the first to discover gunpowder, and the very old books tell how the Chinese had a curious art of making "devouring fire" and causing the earth "to thunder right terribly." The discovery of powder was due to the presence of vast beds of saltpeter in the plains of China and India. Some Chinaman was camping perhaps near these beds and left some charcoal from his campfire. In some way the saltpeter and the charcoal became mixed, and the next camper who built his fire in that spot was no doubt startled by seeing the rocks blaze up furiously. It was only a step then to the addition of sulphur to this flashing powder and presently to the production of fireworks.

Firecrackers are made by hand in China, but the Yankee has invented a few simple but effective devices by means of which an American girl can make as many crackers in one day as 15 or 20 Chinamen and make them better too.

The firecracker tubes are made by rolling sheets of strawboard over a steel roll, forming a tube just the size of the intended firecracker. The fuse is of spun cotton, soaked in a mixture of starch and fine gunpowder, and is fastened into the tube by means of a packing of clay, which hardens into a firm plug.

The explosive mixture, which is of charcoal, bichromate of potash and chlorate of potash, is put into the crackers 100 at a time, and the bottom is then plugged with a bit of cork, which is rammed down hard on the powder. After being dried for a time the crackers are by girls coated with red and green and yellow paper and then braided into bunches and packed away to await the Fourth of July. Chinese firecrackers may still be had in the market, but they are generally regarded as less excellent in quality than those made in this country. But they will all pop, and that is all any boy wants.

When some people cast their bread upon the waters, they expect it to return spread with butter and jam.—Chicago News.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

In the Constitutional Convention the Committee on suffrage and elections made two reports, the only difference between the majority and minority being that embraced in the proposition of the minority to strike out the "Grandfather" clause. The minority report is made by Gen. Harrison, Gov. Oates and Messrs. White and Dent. A time for the consideration of these reports has not yet been fixed. The committee is engaged in considering the report of the committee on taxation and on Monday adopted the clause reducing the tax limit from 75 cents to 65 cents.

The Effects of Ammonia.

The effects of ammonia upon the complexion are directly the opposite to that of arsenic. The first symptom of ammonia poisoning which appears among those who work in ammonia factories is a discoloration of the skin of the nose and the forehead. This gradually extends over the face until the complexion has a stained, blotched and unsightly appearance. With people who take ammonia into their systems in smaller doses, as with their water or food, these striking symptoms do not appear so soon. The only effect of the poison that is visible for a time is a general unwholesomeness and sallowness of the complexion.

Sarcastic.

"Yes, I'm pretty well fixed," remarked the western millionaire. "I began life a barefoot boy and"—

"Of course, but is that unusual out your way?"

"Well, yes. I'm rather an exception."

"Well, well! I know it's quite common in the west for one to die with his boots on, but I didn't know you folks were born that way too."—Philadelphia Press.

ONE ON THE CORNER.

Shrewd Thievery.

"Americans who go abroad must expect to be robbed right and left," said a young man who recently returned from a brief European tour. "One expects to be held up for all sorts of tips, but when the beggars follow you home you can't help feeling a sort of admiration for their ingenuity.

"I went over on one of the Red Star line boats, and the first thing I did on landing at Antwerp was to go to the cable office and send a message to my mother announcing my safe arrival. I paid the toll and thought no more about it until I got home, when among my mail I found a letter from the Antwerp operator, addressed in care of my mother, saying that through an error he had not charged me enough for my cablegram sent on such and such a date, that he had been obliged to pay the difference out of his own pocket, and as his salary was very small and he had a large family and all that sort of thing he felt sure I would reimburse him.

"The amount was a trifling one, and I did send him a foreign money order. I have since learned from experienced travelers that I had been made the victim of a systematic form of robbery and that scarcely a cablegram is sent from the other side unless it is of a business nature that is not followed by some such plea from the European operator."

A WORTHY SUCCESSOR.

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucuous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "SNUFFLES" the GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

"SNUFFLES" is the only perfect CATARRH CURE ever made and is now recognized as the only safe and positive cure for that annoying and disgusting disease. It cures all inflammation quickly and permanently and is also wonderfully quick to relieve HAY FEVER or COLD in the HEAD.

CATARRH when neglected often leads to CONSUMPTION—"SNUFFLES" will save you if you use it at once. It is no ordinary remedy, but a complete treatment which is positively guaranteed to cure CATARRH in any form or stage if used according to the directions which accompany each package. The Glorious Fourth

Emerson's Concord Hymn.

[Sung at the Completion of the Battle Monument, April 19, 1836.]

By the rude bridge that arched the flood,
Their flag to April's breeze unfurled;
Here once the embattled farmers stood
And fired the shot heard round the world.

The foe long since in silence slept;
Alike the conqueror silent sleeps;
And Time the ruined bridge has swept
Down the dark stream which seaward creeps.

THE CONTINENTAL SOLDIER.

On this green bank, by this soft stream,
We set to-day a votive stone;
That memory may their deed redeem,
When, like our sires, our sons are gone.

Spirit that made these heroes dare
To die, and leave their children free,
Bid Time and Nature gently spare
The shaft we raise to them and thee.

THE FIRST BOY HERO OF THE REVOLUTION

By Katherine Bell Tippetts.

NATHAN BEAMAN was a patriotic boy who lived near the village of Shoreham, Vt., 125 years ago. His father was a farmer, but Nathan didn't like to work on the farm. He loved to rove through the forests, marking his trails by cutting the bark from the trees along the way. He set traps for the foxes and raccoons, which abounded, and his winter coat, cap and leggings were all made of the fur of these animals or of the soft brown pelts of the beaver which he trapped.

The little country boy was stout and vigorous. He often spent the short winter day upon Lake Champlain fishing through holes which he had cut in the ice. As he sat holding his lines he used to watch the doings of the garrison of Fort Ticonderoga, on the opposite side of the lake.

The boys of the fort, whose fathers composed the garrison, had fine times on the ice, sliding and playing games, which Nathan longed to join in because they seemed so different from the sports he knew. He became greatly interested in a contrivance the boys had for sliding on ice, and one day plucked up courage to ask how the strange iceshoe was made and put on, and there and then had his first lesson in using skates.

The uncouth looking little fellow, half animal in dress, became the target of their jests, but he bore them so well, laughing with the others at his own expense, that at last the boys allowed him to take part in their sports.

When spring came Nathan not only played under the walls of the fort, but went inside, his ready wit so amusing the soldiers that he was permitted to stay. He taught the soldiers many things about hunting and fishing they had not learned with all their long marching through the American wilderness. He was also able to give them historical information about their own fort during the days when the Indians had claimed the stony height on which the fort stood, and had named it Cheonderoga, meaning the place of many mellow sounds, because here they heard the musical roar of the falls of the Horicon a mile beyond.

Now, the Fort of Ticonderoga had cost Great Britain many million dollars. It contained 120 cannon, besides the large military stores, so you may be sure Nathan had wonderful tales to tell at night by his father's fireside.

It was after one of these firelight talks that Nathan climbed the ladder to his bed in the loft above. He could not sleep. The cold wind came through the cracks of the rudely built house, for, although it was May, the nights were raw and chilly. In the winter the snow sifted in also, powdering the coverlid over him.

All was quiet in the room below, where his father and mother were sleeping. Suddenly a rap sounded at the door. He heard his father ask who was there and then open the door.

Soon some one began to climb the ladder to his room. His father appeared above the open trap-door with a candle in his hand.

"You are needed, my boy. Make haste," was all Farmer Beaman said.

When Nathan stood below he saw several men standing by the fire.

"This is Colonel Ethan Allen, Nathan," said his father, pointing to an alert-looking man.

Colonel Allen laid his hand on the boy's shoulder. "Your father says you know even the rat-holes in the fort opposite. We must capture it to-night. Will you guide us there?"

"I'll go, sir," returned Nathan, who had been reared to serve his country at all times and sacrifice.

When the lake had been crossed and the patriots stood outside the fort Allen said quickly:

"We're ready. Show us the way to the sallyport!"

The startled sentry snapped his fusee-lock and fled as the "Green Mountain boys" dashed up the bank. They followed him into the fort.

Then arose cheer upon cheer as the British soldiers came rushing from the barracks and were taken prisoners.

Colonel Allen followed Nathan to Captain de Laplace's quarters, where that surprised commandant surrendered hastily, "In the name of Jehovah and the Continental Congress."

He found time to exclaim, as his eyes fell upon the boy, "What! You here, too, Nathan? That explains our capture!"

This happened in 1775, and to-day only the ruined walls and half-filled magazines remain of Fort Ticonderoga. The name of Nathan Beaman is almost forgotten, and of the thousands of tourists who come each summer to view this historic place very few think of the boy guide whose name at one time was on every patriot's tongue.—Woman's Home Companion.

WHEN the first Fourth of July celebration waked the echoes of old Philadelphia 125 years ago it was the signal that the United States had opened for business. The colonies had been fighting their king for a year; General Washington was in the field with a ragged and poorly equipped army of not over 6000 men; 17,000 Hessians (German soldiers) had been hired by King George to subdue the American patriots, and the king's forces in the United States amounted to over 30,000 men. At this time, when a large proportion of the colonists were opposed to the war and ruin stared the Revolution in the face, a fierce desire for absolute freedom seized upon the colonies. Through their representatives to the Continental Congress they urged some action that would declare their independence of English rule. On the 7th of June, 1776, Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, offered a resolution in Congress declaring that "these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States." A furious discussion followed. John Adams, afterward President of the United States, was the most powerful and active supporter of the resolution. On the 2d day of July the resolution was adopted, all of the thirteen colonies but New York voting in favor of it. Thomas Jefferson, afterward President of the United States, was delegated to draw up a declaration of American independence. Mr. Adams and Benjamin Franklin read the document before it was submitted to Congress, and they made a few minor changes in it. Otherwise it is the work of Jefferson. On July 4 Congress adopted the Declaration of Independence, and the new nation was wild with joy. All day long the aged bellringer at the State House in Philadelphia had remained in the steeple, waiting to ring the bell when the act of separation from the mother country was officially declared. As hour after hour passed and no word came from Congress his spirits fell and he muttered: "They will never do it—they will never do it." But suddenly a boy came running from the hall and shouted "Ring! Ring!" So the liberty bell rang as it never had rung before. And the citizens gathered in the public square, shouting, firing off muskets, beating drums and making every demonstration of delight. Instantly couriers were dispatched on swift horses to carry the news in every direction. All the cities and towns faithful to the patriot cause joined in the celebration. In Philadelphia the king's arms were torn from the Court House and burned in the street. At New York the citizens pulled down the great lead statue of King George and melted it into bullets. Everywhere there were bonfires and illuminations, and there was a carnival of noise.

Thus was the Fourth of July tradition established, and even to this day we have inherited the noise and reckless rejoicing of that distant first Fourth.

It is an interesting coincidence that John Adams, the chief advocate of independence, and Thomas Jefferson, the writer of the declaration, died on the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence. They died July 4, 1826.—Chicago Record-Herald.

THE GOOD OLD FOURTH.

Wall Street in 1776.

An exciting scene in Wall Street was the reading of the Declaration of Independence, by order of the New York Congress, July 18, 1776. The ceremony at the City Hall was an emphatic expression of New York in particular, and the more notable from the fact that the ships of the enemy had actually arrived and anchored in the harbor, and for twenty-four hours prior to the event women and children and infirm persons were, through Washington's advice, being hurried from the city in anticipation of a bloody conflict. The newspapers of the day chronicle the presence of thousands of listeners to the reading, who filled the air with huzzas of joy and then burned the King's coat-of-arms in a huge bonfire kindled for the purpose, having torn the tablet from the wall of the old structure.—Magazine of American History.

Literature.

Political orators and writers largely influenced the literature of that day, some English critics even admitting that some of these writings rivaled the masterpieces of antiquity. But the Declaration of Independence outranked them all.

When First Read in Boston.

The Declaration of Independence was first read in Boston, amid great rejoicing, from the balcony of the Town House, on July 18, 1776.

PROSPERITY OF THE SOUTH.

Nothing in the Figures to Arouse Anything But Satisfaction.

The substantial and constantly increasing prosperity of the South, particularly the cotton and wheat producing sections, is shown conclusively by the statement, just issued, of the exportation of Southern-growth products from the port of New Orleans last month. A comparison of the figures representing the shipments of merchandise from that port in May for five years past shows that they have more than doubled during that period, and that the exportations in May, 1901, break the record. May is usually an off month for Southern shipping, but it was not so this year. The value of the shipments from New Orleans from April 30 to June 1 last, as entered in the books of the auditor of that port, was $10,[illegible],442, or nearly $5,000,000 greater than that of May, 1899, and $1,401,231 in excess of that of May, 1900.

The cotton exported from New Orleans last month amounted in value to $5,560,574, an increase of almost $1,000,000 over the exports of that commodity during the corresponding month last year. Whereas, in May, 1900, only $481,148 worth of wheat was sent out the value of the shipments of that staple during the same month this year was $1,240,735, or about three times that of last year. The exportations of flour increased correspondingly, $225,920 worth of that articles having been sent out last month, and only $60,679 worth in May, 1900. Likewise, a very much greater quantity of cottonseed oil and cottonseed cake was shipped during the period referred to this year than last, the exportations of the former having amounted to more than twice those of a year ago.

It is worthy of note that the shipments of merchandise, principally rice, from New Orleans to Porto Rico for the single month named this year amounted to $167,520.

There appears to be nothing in these figures to arouse, on the part of our Southern citizens, anything but general satisfaction.—New York Sun.

Keeping a Boarding House.

It would be difficult to cast a stone in New York without striking a boarding house or lodgings. Some exceptionally tony people are engaged in the business of providing food and shelter for homeless individuals of the human race. Among the keepers of swell places are numerous widows of Southern soldiers, the destruction of whose property in the civil war burdened their families with distressing poverty. They managed to come here and get a start, and many have made comfortable fortunes. The widow of a noted general opened a house in Twenty-first street, near Broadway, some twenty-three years ago, and offered Southern beds and board for $6, $8 and $10 a week. Notwithstanding she had been born in the purple, she worked like a slave, and after ten years of drudgery had saved enough money to buy a house in a cross street east of Central Park. Here she raised her prices to $25, $30 and $35 a week, two meals a day, and had as many boarders as she could accommodate. She is to-day a rich woman, with a son and daughter in high society.—New York Press.

A Little Trick for the Silver-Haired Woman

Have you silvery white hair of which you are justly proud? The silvery or snowy head is unusual and should be valued at its proper worth. So called silver or snow tresses are usually dusty gray, drab, yellowish white or a sickly snuff color. The brunette as a rule makes the handsomest old lady, as her hair turns white if it changes with age or from any other cause. The blonde is apt to have tresses of half a dozen different shades once the silver threads appear among the gold. Bleachers are powerless to hurry the whitening process. The hairdressers have not yet discovered a process to bleach hair white. Frequent shampoos with castile soap and a little soda in the water will keep the many-shaded hair bright and live looking during the aggravating transition stage. Once it is a good, clear, clean white an invaluable aid to keeping it so is to rinse it after the shampoo in bluing water. The effect will be the same as when clothes are blued. The limp, yellow hue will give way to a bright, clean white.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Submarine Battery.

A Swedish naval captain, C. A. Ahrnborn, of Gefle, has invented a submarine battery for the purpose of closing narrow straits and inlets to hostile vessels. His idea is to mount a tube on a foundation lying some inches below the surface, whence pneumatic torpedoes are discharged. This tube is movable horizontally within an angle of ninety degrees, whereby it will command a very wide area. The foundation is serving as a magazine for the projectiles, and the battery is worked from any point on shore like other submarine mine arrangements with which also the battery may be combined. As projectiles the inventor in his calculations takes the Whitehead, but suggests that a better explosive than guncotton might be introduced, and that by improved mechanism the torpedoes may be steered further than at present.—London Engineer.

A Fortune Awaits This Inventor.

King Edward is reported as predicting that honor and fortune await the man or woman who invents some means of protecting the drivers of motor cars from dust, without making it necessary to don the unsightly garments now so frequently worn. The pleasure in these carriages is too frequently marred, for the beholder, at least, by the wrapped up figures, wire masks and unspoilable headgear of the occupant, and some other contrivance would be warmly welcomed.

GOMEZ IS HERE.

Gen. Maximo Gomez is in New [illegible]rk. He is very reticent concerning Cuban matters, with which he is [illegible]posed to have much to do. He [illegible] his people were busy in rebuilding their wasted and devastated [illegible]nd, and only desired peace, for [illegible] prosperity and happiness would [illegible]low. He positively declared that [illegible]re is nothing of political significance in his trip to the United States [illegible] this time.

Emperor William has ordered a new [illegible]acht from American builders. His [illegible]ajesty has expressed the opinion [illegible]at Americans are ahead of all Eu[illegible]ope in yacht building.

CLAIMED GUILT.

Mrs. Edwin Ruthven, wife of the Cleveland murderer, electrocuted June 28, made a last effort to save the life of her husband. She declares that she herself was guilty. According to her story she dressed herself in her husband's clothing and assisted in committing a burglary. A policeman appeared on the scene and her accomplice fled. She used her revolver and killed the officer. Ruthven, when told of the confession, declared it untrue and that his wife was innocent of any crime.

WRECKED FOR ROBBERY.

An express train on the Pennsylvania Railroad was ditched two miles east of Greenburg, Pa., early Saturday morning. Three passengers were hurt. Investigation disclosed the fact that the switch lock had been smashed and the rails thrown for the siding. The perpetrators are not known, but train robbery is suspected as the incentive. A terrible accident was averted by the vigilance of the engineer who saw the trouble barely in time to slow his train.

BIG BANK FAILURE.

Thurday morning the Seventh National Bank of New York city closed its doors. A statement of the bank's condition is in preparation and little trouble is anticipated. Because of the bank's suspension, the brokerage firm of Henry Marguand & Co. have assigned. This latter failure is a disastrous one owing to the fact that the firm had agreed to finance the Pittsburg, Shawmut & Northern R. R.

NEWSY NICKNACKS.

BIRD PROFESSORS.

Kept For the Purpose of Teaching Companions to Sing.

"Professors" among birds are those that are kept for the purpose of teaching their companions to sing. These professors have been taught by other birds, or by people who are clever at playing in a manner which resembles whistling. Years of experience have taught canary-raisers that if they would get the best results from their songsters they must use Saxon birds as trainers.

The industry of training the young birds flourishes in the Hartz Mountains, and especially at Andreasberg. Nowhere else are the birds so conscientiously brought up. Thanks to the wonderful patience of the peasants of those parts, the birds learn to modulate their voices, produce silvery sounds, and introduce a variety of notes into the long trill, embellishing them with many a grace-note.

Hitherto these results have never been obtained elsewhere, for the exported birds cease to transmit their vocal qualities in perfection after one or two generations. Now, however, canary education in England may be said to be fairly begun, for two schools for birds have been opened, where the musical education of these warblers is entrusted to "bird organs" brought from the Hartz Mountains.

The London Express characterizes these strange instruments as curious in sound as well as in appearance. They consist of large cylinders full of water. These slide one into the other, and are moved by a chain on a pulley attached to a fixed bar. The musical box is placed at the top of this arrangement.

The bird organ produces a plaintive and monotonous sound resembling that of water rolling over a bed of rocks, and of wind sighing through trees. It seems that these sounds have the effect of taming the birds and making them amenable to discipline.

The walls of the "classrooms" are occupied by lines upon lines of cages. The pupils are grouped in classes according to their degrees of education. Those that possess weak or defective voices, or have false methods of warbling, are the objects of special attention.

Birds that have made a successful beginning are put under the persuasive influence of the finer bird organs, which are worked by electricity, and are remarkable for the richness and perfection of their tones. Whenever a pupil is considered worthy of it, he receives individual tuition, the best artists thus produced afterward becoming teachers to new arrivals.

DEPARTMENT STORE DETECTIVES.

An Elaborate Secret Service in the Big City Shops.

Each year sees an increase in the "secret service" of the big shops. According to a trade journal, each department of each department-store has its corps of "secret service" detectives and workers. The head of the department is the head of the corps. It is his duty to keep closest tab on the doings of all competitors. The walls of his private office are lined with the advertisements of rival shops. That each advertised article may be carefully examined, shoppers are at once despatched to purchase them—from the 90-cent taffeta marked down to 59 to the brass bedstead at $5.50, worth double. There is a regular staff of these shoppers, some of whom never come near the house, but communicate by letter entirely with the department. "In one store," says the trade journal, "these purchases are received and inspected in what is known as "Room No. 3," a place as dreaded by the buyers of the house as is a dark room by an infant. Many a department head has suffered decapitation as the result of deliberations in that court room." The object of keeping such close watch is not alone to be posted upon the doings of rivals but to compare the merits of various buyers.

Another brand of such secret service includes a number of women who shop in the firm's own store. This is to test the saleswomen, both in ability and deportment. Many a sales girl has been suddenly discharged or advanced without knowing that it was all due to some information thus gleaned. The superintendent of a large establishment where the "secret service" is supposed to have reached high development says that he regards the espionage of the sales staff as of supreme importance. It is interesting to find that he considers floorwalkers, as a rule, too lenient. They hate to report delinquencies and inattentions of the shopgirls for the same reason that many shoppers do—that it may result in dismissal for the offender. "Moreover," says the superintendent, "the floorwalkers are so busy strutting about looking pretty that they can pay but little attention to such minor matters as the pedortment of the sales people."

Small Liberties Permissible.

A man may take small liberties with his dress without being positively out of fashion. This is particularly true of evening dress in summer. Comfort is then a necessity—that is, it is more of a necessity than it is during the cool months. To conserve comfort one may, without transcending the ethics of the mode, wear a straw hat with evening dress—and I am not prepared to entirely condemn the evening jacket for summer wear. Men will wear it, because with it one may wear a fold collar, a pleated shirt and a low cut white waistcoat. Whenever a man attends a dance he should not forget that women must be given some consideration, and for that reason he should show his gallantry by suffering slight discomforts. The gloves are worn to protect the gowns of the women from the perspiring hands of men, and no man should so far forget what he owes a woman as to deliberately go barehanded because it is comfortable.—The Haberdasher.

President Loubet Is Forgiving.

President Loubet of France is a man who bears no malice. When a member of the nobility smote him on the head with a stick as he was peacefully sitting in the race course at Auteuil, the courts sentenced the cowardly offender to two years' imprisonment. The president wished to pardon the culprit at a very early stage of his imprisonment, but the ministry represented that, however lightly M. Loubet, the man, might regard the offense, it was against public policy that the assailant and insulter of M. Loubet, the president, should escape with a nominal punishment.

Still Clings to Old Customs.

The United States Supreme court holds on to precedents and traditions of the past with more tenacity than any other body in the country. The court kept up the practice of filling its official snuffbox longer than did the United States senate, and the senate held on to the once popular drug long after it had ceased to be generally used. The love of the old way is shown in the Supreme court every time that august body meets by the array of quill pens distributed over the desks. When the quill was the only pen instructions were given to have a certain number of them placed on the desks for members of the court. Very few people now use the quill, and those who do would get along very well with a steel pen. But no one has ever dared to interfere with a custom once established, and the quill pen doubtless still has a long life in the court.

Fourth of July

FREEDOM'S ANNIVERSARY.

Flutter the flags from school and steeple
Throb the drums over road and street;
Thrill the air with the shouts of people,
Super the day of their pride to greet.
Children hail it with gleeful voices,
Old men flush as its thunders break,
Tellers stand how the land rejoices
Phase the pace to the pulse for freedom's sake.

Freedom, over the stormy waters,
Brought by a handful, hated and few
Birthright now of our sons and daughters,
Hallowed by valor and long years through.
Freedom! Lord, let the bow which sing hi
Freedom! Still let us breathe its name,
Far and wide let the strong bells ring its Wide and far be its early fame.

Lift we now a triumphant chorus,
God be praised both for great and small!
Ever his clear love watcheth over us,
Still his banner is over us all.
Through the dark he mighty led us,
Into the promised land we came.
In our want and our grief he fed us,
Ever, forever we'll praise his name.

During the day in summer splendor—
Day that showered amid blood and tears,
Back in the time when do surrender
Brave men made unto coward fears.
Tell to our boys and girls the story,
How they wrought for the nation's weal,
Who thereafterward have this their glory—
Tempted and tried, they were true as steel.

SPOOK'S FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATION.

"I don't know, Marsden, how we can ever worm any sort of a confession out of her," said Lawyer Darke, with an accent on the pronoun. "If any comes, it will be because she is startled into telling it. A good scare, like a cyclone or an earthquake, might possibly do the business. No amount of persuasion or threats ever will, that's evident. Meanwhile I don't see what we can do for Miss Laura only to wait and try to conceive some new plan."

Speaking these words, Lawyer Darke descended the stairs of an old tenement, followed by Harry Marsden, and stepped out upon the hot pavement of the street.

It was the afternoon of July 3. On the stairs down which the two men had just descended crouched the small figure of a boy whose size indicated about the age of 7, but whose face said 12. The latter told the truth. The boy was emaciated to the last degree that one could hope to find him out of his bed, and his face was the color of chalk. His colorless lips were thin and delicate, and his eyes, large and burning and sunk in dark shadows, looked spectral in the gloom of the dirt strewn hallway.

"PLEASE GIVE ME SOME MONEY. I WANT SOME FIREWORKS."

The lawyer's words concerning the cyclone and earthquake had been meaningless to the author of them, but they were not meaningless to Spook. He knew the story of the pretty, pale factory girl in the attic room, penned up with an old woman who did not hesitate to abuse her every day and many times a day—that is, he knew that the girl called the old woman "grandma" and that "grandma" claimed that that relationship existed between them; knew also that there had been of late rumors afloat to the effect that Laura was not the old woman's granddaughter, that there was some money somewhere that ought to be Laura's and that the old woman could straighten things out if she would, but that this she refused to do. This much of a story had been roughly woven together in the neighborhood. How near to the truth it came none of the denizens actually knew, but Spook accepted it, gathered it carefully together and placed it in his mind as a sort of an environment about the words dropped by the lawyer.

Meantime Lawyer Darke went to his office to try and devise some new scheme for the benefit of his client, and the client, Harry Marsden, started for home. The real known facts from which these two hoped to develop a case of interest and good to all concerned were these:

About a year previous Harry Marsden had come into possession of a fortune from an uncle, one Joseph Marsden, who had died in England. The will had stated that Harry was made heir, as the nearest of kin known to be living, but that there was a possibility of the existence of a stepdaughter, the child of the uncle's wife by a former marriage; that if this girl could be found within the space of ten years half of the property was to be hers. The girl, the will continued, was born in 1874. At the age of 3 years, only a few months after the marriage of Joseph Marsden to the young widow, the

HISTORY OF OUR FLAG

Betsy Ross and Congress 1777 Designed Old Glory.

A brief history of the flag of the United States may be appreciated here, as there are doubtless some whose views on the particular subject are a bit hazy. Its history is history and cannot but be interesting.

In the time of the Revolutionary war there lived in a little house on Arch street, Philadelphia, a young widow by the name of Betsy Ross. The house still stands and is known as No. 239. It was the second house built in Philadelphia, its bricks came over with William Penn in the ship Welcome.

Betsy Ross was known as an expert needlewoman and had made a name for herself in her calling. It is said, by some, that she made the ruffles for the shirts of George Washington. So when congress, June 14, 1777, appointed a committee, with George Ross, to design a flag, the committee very naturally went to Betsy. She made a rough draft of the flag, a design consisting of alternate red and white stripes and 13 six pointed stars on a background of blue. This she showed her, and she suggested the substitution of the five pointed star. The suggestion was approved, and the color of the stripes was prophetically selected by the red flag of the British and the white flag of the navy in use at the time previously.

The flag was adopted by congress June 14, 1777. Betsy soon after made John Maypole, and for years they held the contract for making the flags for the fleet in the Delaware. There is a record in the treasury department dated May, 1777, to pay Betsy $14 12s. 2d. for making flags for the Delaware river fleet.

And what of Betsy Maypole? The fingers are dust now, and she lies in Mount Moriah cemetery. She lived to the ripe age of 84 and died, but the flag of the Union forever will keep her memory.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Early Fourths in Boston.

Edward Everett Hale tells of the earliest Fourth of July celebration in his remembrance. It was the year 1833 and on that day for the first time a great chorus of school children sang "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." He speaks of a favorite poem of his which was much in evidence on the Fourth. It was written by a boy, and its beginning was:

Spread the fife and beat the drum,
Independence day has come.

It was just about this time that the character of the celebration of the anniversary of the birthday of American independence began to change. Bonfires were held as usual, but started to take the place of speeches the larger towns of the country. The declaration of Independence has always been a feature of the occasion.

The opening of trade with China began in the small firecracker. American factories soon found chances of making big ones. Now they hold the scepter and has reigned.—Boston Globe.

[illegible] perpetual motion.

The Alabama Press Association met in Birmingham Saturday [illegible] after a most pleasurable existence of fifteen days, having traveled over a thousand miles, [illegible] two States and enjoyed [illegible] The trip was made pleasant by the residents, [illegible] generous hospitality [illegible] party comprised as great a crowd as ever [illegible] together.

The Association met in Montgomery June 21, and in the interest [illegible] business was hospitably entertained by the citizens of the capital city. Leaving Montgomery the evening of June 21, for Birmingham the Association proceeded to Memphis, where on their arrival the following morning they were royally entertained. Breakfast was provided for them and all the principal parts of the city were visited. After a stay of [illegible] hours the excursionists left Memphis City where they arrived the morning of June 23. But a stop was made here while the train was made up, and [illegible] we went across the fertile plains of Kansas where the wheat was being harvested and the corn [illegible] to perfection. We rushed through Topeka, without catching a glimpse of Mrs. Nation and on [illegible] for the rest of the day, passing through the southeast corner of Colorado during the night, arriving at Raton, New Mexico, for breakfast.

Raton appeared to be a nice little town, with small coal mines in the vicinity. The bracing atmosphere gave us a good appetite for breakfast. But time is short and we only sojourned four hours. On we go through Mexican towns with their adobe houses, picturesque inhabitants, [illegible] and valleys, river and all combining a magnificent panorama, [illegible] other in succession, [illegible] we arrive at Las Vegas. Here then on [illegible] of the day [illegible] Albuquerque. Here we [illegible] hours. Albuquerque is a thriving city that is [illegible] great. The town is [illegible] and has a [illegible] appearance. The evening passed there was delightfully pleasant.

Just after leaving Albuquerque we came across our first Indians. The red men and the squaws and papooses swarmed about the train and did a flourishing business in bows and arrows, [illegible] and pipes, and other [illegible]. But with a shriek and a [illegible] we are off again, passing into the State of Arizona in the night. Across the desert, through [illegible] mountains, we onward sped, admiring the scenery, enjoying the motion, exhilarated by the bracing climate, until at sunset we arrived at the Needles on the borders of California. Here the Indians again took possession and the capacity of trunks and valises was taxed to store away the curiosities purchased.

Leaving the Colorado river we entered Southern California and a desert country for a considerable distance, until as we advanced Central California the country changed and on entering the San Joaquin valley our preconceived notions of the fertility of the State began to be realized. Luxuriance reigned. There was a profusion of flowers and all vegetation appeared to exult in its own beauty. Fresno, the gem of the valley, was our first stopping place. As we alighted at the depot carriages were in waiting for us and carried us into town where we were the guests of the Commercial Club of Fresno at breakfast. We then were driven through miles of vineyards interspersed with orange groves, orchards of olives, peach, apricots, etc. At one elegant mansion in the midst of a bower of beautiful flowers and shrubs we were invited to alight and the carriages were soon a mass of bloom which served to enhance—if that were possible—the beauty of the fair ladies of Alabama who were absolutely delighted with the glory of their surroundings. We next visited the St. George vineyard, one of the largest wine making establishments in the world, where those who were so inclined sampled the products of the establishment. These vineyards, we were informed, were a few years ago desert land, and they have been converted into this fertile spot by irrigation. Some of us, I think, would have liked to have stayed there longer, but we were soon on the road back to the depot.

After leaving Fresno we passed through a beautiful country and arrived at Stockton in the afternoon. Our Stockton friends placed us on the electric cars and showed us the beauties of their thriving town. Then we had a glorious swim in an open pool. Afterwards carriages were again at our disposal and we visited the Stockton Woolen Mills and a large agricultural machinery works. Stockton impressed us very favorably and we were loth to leave, but the inexorable itinerary compelled us to go on and we arrived at San Francisco on Wednesday night, just five days after we had left Birmingham. Crossing the bay, the bright stars above us and the dark water beneath, with the innumerable lights of the city beckoning to us ahead, was a beautiful sight. It was cold, however, and overcoats were gladly donned.

San Francisco is a splendid city, the ninth largest as regards population, in the United States. It contains some magnificent buildings, fine streets and storehouses, although many streets are very steep, and above all a most hospitable people. Bright and early the next morning we were all on board "The Defiance" a tugboat specially chartered for our voyage of discovery down the beautiful bay of San Francisco. A band of music on board enlivened the proceedings and helped to enthuse a few of the more timid who dreaded sea-sickness. The weather was delightful, just cool enough to be pleasant, the sea as smooth as a mill pond, the sun shone brilliantly, and the salty taste of the light breeze was delicious to one whose earlier life was spent on the ocean wave. The Committee who had us in charge kindly indicated the different points of interest, one-tenth of which I cannot enumerate.

Down to the Golden Gate, the entrance to the mighty Pacific, through which so many of our gallant soldiers have passed never to return, we sailed a joyous company. The hills on both sides glistened as with gold in the fervid rays of the sun, the sea gull skimmed gracefully aloft, seamen on the various vessels we passed smiled cheerily at us, nature and man did Crops are looking fine and we are having plenty of rain in this section.

We are having lots of sickness round about here.

We had a picnic at this place on the Fourth and the day was beautiful for the occasion. But we can't say that everybody enjoyed the day, there was so much bug juice and swarming among the boys that no lady or gentleman could hardly enjoy themselves. Lots of our neighbors say they are done with picnics, and I am just about with them. In fact, some say the grand juries at Centreville and Clanton will have plenty of work to do from this section and the adjoining neighborhoods.

Well, Mr. Editor, as I have a friend writing to the Reflector, or at least he signs his name Big Ike's friend, so I will close for this time.

Plums were very plentiful but are now on the wane.

Myrk Smitherman has been here on business.

Miss Elsie Tilsdy has returned home to the regret of the many friends she made here by her charming manners.

Mr. Dave Garner is looking much more respectable since Master Richard Clay has come into his family; we hope this young man may never make him feel less so.

Mrs. Blalack has lately been visiting friends and relatives in the country.

Miss Della Blalack has been called to Riderville to see Mrs. Ed Blalack who has been quite ill. She has returned, bringing Master Owen Blalack with her, who has been on the sick list.

Dr. F. DuBose and wife have gone to Selma to see their son, Dr. Goodwin DuBose.

We are pleased to state that Mrs. N. A. Goodwin is convalescing from a serious attack.

Mesdames N. A. Saportas and R. D. Martin are on a visit to Mrs. F. M. Matthews, of Matthews, who is a sister to the first and class mate to the latter.

Mrs. Claughton is visiting relatives in Verbena.

Miss Celestia Dunlap and little sister are visiting friends here.

Mr. Stewart, of Stanton, was here on business lately.

Wheeler Foshee was restored to health in a few week here.

Our much needed rain came the 29th with much bravo, but no serious hurt from wind and lightning.

Our people are making preparations for the 20th century meeting to be held at this place the 13th and 14th inst.

Those that attended the picnic at Clanton the Fourth report a very nice time.

The singing at Mulberry the 5th Sunday in June was a success, it was well attended, the singing good, and last, but not least, a good dinner and plenty of it.

The crop prospect in this section is good, though we are needing rain.

The picnic at Mr. Sims' the 4th near Mulberry, was enjoyed by all present.

The Showalter Normal at Clanton will soon be in session; some are making preparations to go; others should take advantage of this grand opportunity to study music, and more especially those that are expecting to teach, either vocal or instrumental music.

Hester Kendrick spent Sunday in Clanton.

We are having a good deal of sickness in this community now.

We are sorry to say the little infant of Bill McKinney's is expected to die.

On Thursday evening, July 4, Sim Williams, colored, met with a horrible death. He was hauling logs for Pattillo Bros. and the log cutters in dislodging a tree, misjudged the direction in which it was falling and ran the wrong way. It caught Sim, crushing his head and breaking his limbs in several places. Another life was saved, only by Sim running over him and knocking him down.

J. C. Pattillo was right badly bruised last Thursday, his horse running away and throwing him out of the buggy. No more.

Small potatoes are not to be sneezed at any longer. They are all used in the starch factories. About 16,600 tons of potato starch is made in this country every year. Here is where the small potato is just as good, so far as it goes, as the big one.

Street trees, properly planted and cared for, work a remarkable change in the value of residential property. Any one with doubts on this subject should look into the history of Washington, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Buffalo and other cities, where a comprehensive system of street planting has been carried into effect.

The inventors of names should find out a brighter and better word than "automobile"—something short and snappy. The "wheel" is easier to mention than the "bicycle." A fit word of a few letters should be chosen for the motors. And something Anglo-Saxon might be found to chase away the "chauffeurs." That is decidedly too foreign a term.

A consular report from Vienna gives results of the census recently taken in Austria-Hungary. It shows that the present population of the country is about 46,890,000, 19,200,000 of which is furnished by Hungary. During the last decade the population of Austria increased 9.3 percent. Hungary shows an increase of 10.7 percent for the last 10 years, which is slightly less than for the 10 years preceding.

The latest statistics of the Salvation army show that there are 732 corps now in the United States, with 24 food depots, which has furnished 110,000 monthly meals, and 190 social institutions for the poor, with a total daily accommodation in the same for 7200. The workingmen's hotels number 66 and the workingwomen have 6, with an aggregate of 6325 inmates. Five labor bureaus and three from colonies are established, the latter having 240 laborers. Other minor institutions and slum settlements number about 80 in all. The expenditure on all these institutions in 1900 was $253,000, of which $210,000 was raised by the work or the payments of inmates.

Minnesota is a poor place of residence for a man who does not want to support his wife and abandons her. The legislature has passed a law making wife abandonment a felony, punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than one year and not more than three, with a provision for a suspension of sentence providing the husband give bond to the state to support his wife and family. Under this law it is believed that deserting husbands can be arrested in and extradited from other states. If the law stands a proposed test it is not unlikely that other states may follow Minnesota's example. The courts have to deal with no more difficult problem than this, and the total annual expense to the public in caring for abandoned families must be enormous. So long as the husband remains in the same place with his family he can be got at and made to pay, but once out of the jurisdiction of the court, he is practically a free man.

The African quagga is extinct, and several families of antelopes have been wiped out of existence. Zebras are scarce, giraffes are few in number, the rhinoceros and hippopotamus are passing from view, but the helladotherium (hitherto only known through fossil remains found in Greece) still roam through the forests of Uganda. The helladotherium is of the size of an ox, its neck is a little longer, proportionately, than that of a horse, the ears like those of the ass with silky black fringes, the head taperlike and the nostrils like those of the giraffe. The forehead is a vivid red, and the neck, shoulders, stomach and back a deep reddish brown, and the hindquarters and legs and boldly striped in purplish black and white. Great is the helladotherium, for has it not survived the vicissitudes of two or more geological ages. And does its existence provide the narrators of tales about the sea serpent—that antediluvian leviathan of the deep—with badly needed evidence of their truthfulness?

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

Further Report of Alabama's Constitutional Convention.

Thirty-Fifth Day.

Ten Minute Rule Adopted—Charitable, Educational and Religious Institutions Free.

There were 121 delegates present this morning. A ten minute rule on speaking was adopted, and the meetings will hereafter last from 9:30 a. m. to 1 p. m., and from 3:30 to 6 p. m. Section 30 of the article on executive was finally adopted giving the governor the right to remove a sheriff during impeachment proceedings.

The discussion on section 5 of the article on taxation was taken up but was continued until the afternoon session in which 117 delegates participated. It was tabled. Sections 6 and 8 on the same were adopted. Section 6 exempts from taxation institutions of religious, charitable and educational nature: section 8 prohibits the state from collecting charges payable by the state from counties or corporations. Section 7 relating to city tax rate was tabled for the present and the discussion of section 9 relating to county indebtedness, was interrupted by adjournment.

Thirty-Sixth Day.

County Debts Limited to 3 1-2 Per Cent With Additional 1 1-2 Per Cent for Improvements.

One hundred and thirteen delegates began work this morning at 9:30. The committee on harmony got its first job when the article on executive was referred to it. Section 9 of the article on taxation was discussed freely and after much parliamentary practice, was adopted so that "no county shall become indebted in an amount greater than 3½ per cent of the taxable value of the property thereof," with a provision of 1½ per cent additional for buildings and bridges.

Section 10 was read before dinner and discussed after, 117 delegates participating. It refers to limiting cities and towns to 5 per cent taxation, providing that 3 per cent additional may be added for improvements. Final action was deferred. Adjourned until July 5.

Thirty-Seventh Day.

City Tax Limit Settled—Preamble Adopted and Section 1 of the Declaration of Rights.

The attendance this morning was 116 and the discussion on the city debt limit was resumed and continued into the afternoon session which was called to order by Dr. R. M. Cunningham and in which 111 delegates took part. Section 10 of the article on taxation was then adopted. It limits the taxation of towns under 6,000 population to 5 per cent including present indebtedness, and towns of more than 6,000 to 7 per cent.

The preamble and declaration of rights was then taken up. The former reads as in the old Constitution and was adopted.

Section 1 of the declaration of rights was then adopted, which reads: That all men are equally free and independent; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Thirty-Eighth Day.

A Good Day's Work—Nine Sections Adopted—Exemption Committee Reports — Juries.

One hundred and eleven delegates answered to their names at roll call Saturday morning, July 6th. It was decided to remain in session until 2 p. m. and then adjourn until 10 a. m. Monday.

The committee on exemptions made its report that the present article be re-enacted as it stands.

The convention took up the pending question, the declaration of rights, and adopted sections 3 to 11 inclusive.

Section 3 defines the state's political power. Section 4 prohibits joining church and state. Section 5 defines the liberty of the press. Section 6 defines ownership of property. Section 7 regulates rights of defendant in criminal cases. A minority report requiring statement in indictment of time and place of crime was tabled. Section 8 requires legal application of laws. Section 9 prescribes certain procedure in criminal cases. Gen. Oates offered an amendment giving a judge indictable powers in cases in which the grand jury find no true bills, but it was lost. Section 10 provides that no person shall be tried twice for the same offense. Section 11 bars no one from prosecuting civil cases.

Section 12 reads: That the rights of trial by jury shall remain inviolate. There was a minority report on this section signed by Samuel Blackwell, E. P. Wilson and T. J. Cornwell, recommending that in civil cases three-fourths of a jury should render a verdict. Discussion was in progress when adjournment was ordered.

Thirty-Ninth Day.

Jury System Not Changed—Twenty-Six Sections Adopted—Bad Day for Amendments.

Only 95 delegates were present this morning and but 87 in the afternoon, and more leaves of absence were granted. The first thing done was to rescind the resolution denying pay to absent delegates only when sick. After much debate the present jury system was left as it is by an almost unanimous vote, thus adopting section 12 of the article on declaration of rights.

In the afternoon sections 18 to 39 of the article on declaration of rights were adopted. This disposes of the entire article. An amendment was suggested to prohibit the whipping of convicts but it was lost. Gov. Oates suggested imprisonment for debt on wilful and flagrant fraud but this was tabled. The sections adopted are practically the same as in the old constitution.

HUNTSVILLE ENTERPRISES.

Incorporation papers will be filed Monday in Madison county, Lincoln county, Tennessee, and two Tennessee counties bordering on the Alabama line for an oil company with a capital of $100,000. The company is composed of several prominent business men, who are backed by New York capitalists. For several weeks past they have had agents in the field taking options on all property they could secure having indications of oil, and they have secured the rights on between 10,000 and 20,000 acres. The company intends to sink several wells.

The American Cotton Company is making arrangements to put in a dozen round bale cotton compresses in North Alabama this season.

The Gurney Handle Company will commence operations again Monday after an idleness of two months. The capacity of the plant has been doubled.

NEW EVIDENCE.

The body of H. C. Newell, of Mildale, was found on the railroad track at Reeders last week. He was supposed to have been killed by the cars. Monday, A. J. Simmons and Geo. Bullard were arrested charged with knowing something regarding his death. It is said that Mr. Newell had $100 when he left home. When his body was found there was no money on it, and the men arrested were the last seen with the deceased.

DAMAGE AT HUNTSVILLE.

A hail, rain and heavy wind storm did a great deal of damage in Madison county Monday night. Fruit trees and corn were prostrated and buildings were blown away. The residence of R. C. Ganter in West Huntsville was blown away by the wind.

Selma, Tuscaloosa and Demopolis are to have street fairs in October.

An interesting supreme court decision in New York holds that a woman in getting off a street car must be given time to gather up her skirts, in addition to time to step down from the car platform. It is further held that it is the conductor's duty to see that her skirts are clear of any car fittings or attachments before he starts the car. If he starts before he assures himself that they are free he is guilty of negligence. The court, on the other hand, does not consider that a woman is negligent to travel upon a car with a dress so long that it will be more likely to catch upon such appliances as necessarily extend above the platform, such as bell plungers, etc.

The death in Balse of Emilie Kempin recalled an era that already seems ancient. Its date was 1889. There was then in New York City no opportunity for a woman to study law; nor had any woman advocate invaded the city, though the legislature had in 1886 legalized the admission to the bar of the gentler sex. Mme. Kempin graduated in 1886 from the University of Zurich, but meeting with opposition in her application for a law professorship she came to New York City, where she applied for admission as a law student at Columbia. Her application was refused, but she was permitted to attend the classes as a "visitor." In the fall of 1889 she founded the first women's law class in the city. Later she returned to Europe. The number of women lawyers in the metropolis is not yet great—not so great proportionally as in Boston or in the west—but enough have entered the profession to remove such action from the realm of experiment. Truly an amazing change for a single decade to have witnessed.

CONVICT CLAINS TO HAVE DISCOVERED LOST SECRETS

SUICIDED, DRIVEN CRAZY BY THE HEAT

Disastrous Floods in Michigan—C. E. Convention in Session in Cincinnati—Death in a Railroad Accident — Kansas History.

IS HER STORY TRUE?

A woman who has claimed for years that she was the eldest daughter of Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort, is dead. She was known as Sophia Adelaide, and always insisted that when an infant she was taken from her royal mother and in her place was substituted the daughter of Prince Albert by his morganatic wife, the Countess DeReuss. She is said to have received remittances frequently through a clergyman in England and when she died she tried to effect a settlement with the crown but failed. She came to this country and brought out a book, which, it is said, has been suppressed in England and Germany. It contained her contentions.

HIS ART SAVED HIM.

"Damascus" (S. R.) Dawson, who has served five years of a ten-year sentence for shooting Walter Scott, his son-in-law, has been pardoned by Governor Shaw, of Iowa. He claims to have recovered the art of making Damascus steel and of hardening copper. Capitalists who are interested in a company to develop Dawson's process secured the evidence upon which he was pardoned, as he had asserted that he would die with his secrets rather than reveal them while in prison.

THE FOURTH IN OHIO.

One of the bloodiest affrays in the history of the Pan Handle occurred at Wheeling Junction, O., on the night of the Fourth, and three Italians left a trail of blood behind their knives. The men, part of a railroad gang, met a party on the road at night and after a few words flashed stilettos, killed two men almost instantly, cut three other persons badly and fled. The two dead men were stabbed through the heart. One of the Italians was captured Friday and lynching is feared.

THE C. E. SOCIETY.

The twentieth annual convention of the Christian Endeavor Society was formally opened in Cincinnati Saturday night by President Clark of Boston. Bishop Fallows, of Chicago, presided. Secretary of State L. C. Laylin of Columbus welcomed the delegates to the state for Governor Nash, whose physician advised against his attendance. President McKinley sent a telegram. St. Louis wants the next convention.

CRAZED BY THE HEAT.

F. A. Brackett killed his wife and then shot himself at the home of their daughter in Des Moines, Iowa, on July 5th. The deceased was a man of 68 years. During the day he frequently complained that the heat was making him ill. It is believed his mind became affected.

TWO POSTAL CLERKS KILLED.

The tender of an Iowa Central passenger train jumped the track near Hampton, Ia., late Thursday afternoon, derailing three cars. Postal Clerks Kendall and McKinzie of St. Paul were killed. Two others were injured.

TOO MUCH OF WATER.

Western Michigan was visited by a disastrous cloudburst Friday and the resultant damages will amount to thousands of dollars. Both the Pierre Marquette and the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroads were crippled. Road beds were washed out in dozens of places, and a bridge at Saranac was washed away, dams in the Flat and Rough rivers were washed out and many mills along these streams will be idle for days. Grand river rose three feet and 6 inches in four hours. Great damage was done to fruit trees and growing crops in the western Michigan peach belt.

HONOR TO THE DEAD.

Thousands of sorrowing friends of ex-Governor Hazen S. Pingree, of Michigan, passed through the city hall of Detroit last Friday, where the ex-Governor's body lay in state.

It is reported that nine South American Republics will refuse to participate in the Pan-American Congress to be held in Mexico.

AN HISTORIC SPOT.

Kansas on the Fourth, officially accepted title to the site eight miles north of Courtland, where the first American flag was raised in upper Louisiana territory. The site is on what is known as Pawnee Republic, an old Indian village. Here Lieut. Zebulon M. Pike ordered the Spanish flag hauled down and the Stars and Stripes hoisted, September 29, 1806. The legislature has appropriated money to erect a monument which will be unveiled on September 29.

THE CZAR'S COMMENT.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says the czar, in approving the recommendations of the commission on the reorganization of construction of high schools, wrote on the margin of the report: "I hope earnest consideration will also be given to strengthening the religious and moral education of our youth."

That the apple crop is actually worth more in cash, annually, than the wheat crop is a fact. The entire apple crop for 1900 was 215,000,000 of barrels. These, at $2 per barrel, would mean $430,000,000. The wheat crop does not average in value much over $300,000,000. The meaning of this is that we have got the world's market for our fruit, and are exporting nearly 4,000,000 of barrels per year. These bring in the European markets nearer $4 a barrel than $2. And still the export trade is increasing every year.

Fatalities and loss of property resulting from the celebration of the Fourth will not equal last year's record. The number actually killed is but nineteen in the whole country and but $60,000 property loss by fire. The number injured is 1,611.

A boy was caught by a balloon rope during a Fourth of July celebration in Iowa and carried into the next county. The aeronaut yelled to the boy to hang on. He did so and it saved his life and brought him from his admirers a $100 purse.

Seven expeditions are trying to reach the North Pole, the principal among them being the Zeigler-Baldwin expedition, led by Evelyn B. Baldwin, formerly of the weather bureau, financed by William Zeigler, of New York.

Twenty-one disciples of John Alexander Dowie visited Evanston, a Chicago suburb, Friday night, and, despite the efforts of the entire police force of the place, a mob of 1,000 people drove them out of town. Rotten eggs.

Few realize the rapidity with which the pen travels in the hand of an expert penman. For instance, even at the rate of thirty words a minute, at the end of an hour's steady writing, the pen has passed over a space of 300 yards.

Honest bank clerks—and their name is legion—suffer every time a black sheep gets into the fold.

DOUBLE MURDER.

A double murder occurred in Arkansas last Friday in which Jim Johns, aged 17, and neice were murdered and their bodies placed in a burning building. When the fire had been extinguished by neighbors, it was found that the girl had been stabbed to the heart and her head crushed with an axe, while Johns had his head crushed and both arms broken. There is no clew to the perpetrators of the crime.

Omaha celebrated the Fourth with a genuine bull fight with professional toreadors from Mexico.

CHILDREN'S TRAGEDY.

Raymond L. Albers, a 13-year-old lad, Friday afternoon shot and killed Emanuel Koehler, a boy of 12 years, and then hanged himself. The affair happened in Albany, N. Y.

The body of Abraham Lincoln has been secretly removed to a private vault in the monument at Rigdely, Ill., as a safeguard against any attempt to carry it way.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES

OUR CORRESPONDENT'S WEEKLY LETTER

New Postal Regulations—The Weeklys in Canton — European Naval Station Re-established—Dewey Resigns — Conger Returns.

The postal department will institute a sweeping reform this week by barring from second-class mail privileges the large class of periodical publications which depends largely on gift enterprises, guessing contests, nominal subscription rates for circulation. The new order will not interfere with legitimate newspapers and similar periodicals, but it will end the abuse by which numerous publications load the mails with circulars produced wholly by offers or schemes that are either fraudulent or designed or reduce the circulation to nominal rates. It is also likely to exclude from books, which have secured admission as second-class matter. By the new regulation a vast amount of printed matter that is now paying the one cent rate will be charged eight cents a pound. The second-class mail has grown until it embraces nearly three-fourths of the entire weight of mail matter handled by the government, yet it brings in revenue of less than $4,000,000 a year out of the entire postal revenue of more than $110,000,000. While it carries about three-fourths of the weight it furnishes about one-thirtieth of the revenue. To handle and carry the second-class matter costs fully $60,000,000 a year more than the government receives for handling and carrying it.

The navy department has issued orders re-establishing the European station with Rear Admiral J. G. Cromwell in command. The cruiser Chicago is ordered to proceed to Rio and will be the flagship of the admiral. The Albany and Newark have sailed from Singapore on their way for the new station. The headquarters of the squadron will be designated by Admiral Cromwell and probably will be in the Mediterranean. Admiral Cromwell at Rio has acknowledged the receipt of his orders. It is expected that the rendezvous of the ships for the assembly will be Gibraltar.

The European station, although marked on the naval maps, has not been in actual existence since the Spanish war. The limits of the station are Port Said on the east and a line running north and south through the Atlantic from the southernmost point of Greenland to Para, Brazil, thence eastward. This includes the Azores, and all of the waters of Europe and North Africa. The last establishment of the European station is said to be entirely devoid of political significance and to be simply a move in the regular procedure of the navy to place the service in the same condition that it was prior to the war.

Charles G. Dawes, comptroller of the currency, has tendered his resignation to the president to take effect October 1. He has declared his intention of becoming a candidate for U. S. Senator from Illinois. It is stated on good authority that Mr. Dawes has recommended A. D. Lynch, late of the insolvent bank department of the comptroller's office, as his successor. Lynch is from Indianapolis.

Hon. Edwin Conger, United States minister to China, will sail on the 17th on the Nippon Maru for his post at Pekin.

The big naval tug Fortune, now at Boston, has been ordered by the navy department to proceed to South America to Puget Sound, 14,000 miles. The trip will be one of the longest on record for such a craft of this character.

The forces of the insurgent band in Bellarmino, which have been operating about Donsol, province of Sorsogon, have surrendered to Colonel Wint at Albay, with one thousand men and 214 guns.

General McArthur has sailed for Nagasaki where he will stay two weeks before coming to the United States.

The train bearing the president's party arrived at Canton, O., Friday. Mrs. McKinley stood the journey well and her condition remains favorable. Owing to Mrs. McKinley's illness there was no formal demonstration at the station. There was, however, a very large crowd present, completely filling the station platform. When the president and Mrs. McKinley stepped from the train a cheer of welcome went up

BILL ARP'S LETTER

Torrid Weather Not Conducive to Thoughts of Pleasant Nature.

BARTOW MAN QUOTES REV. BEECHER

Various Phases of Profanity Given—William the Incentive To Recount Incidents of the Bad Habit.

This horrid, torrid weather reminds me of what Henry Ward Beecher said in his church one sweltering day in July. He took no text. He wiped the perspiration from his brow and looking solemnly at the large congregation said: "It is hot today. It is land hot. It is as hot as hell." Everybody was amazed and shocked until he added, "That is the language I hear two young men use at the door of my church as I passed them. My friends, it is not as hot as hell." In his low earnest tone he pictured the torments of hell and the certainty of the wicked until the atmosphere of the church seemed to be more pleasant in comparison. The audience ceased to move their fans and the body was still and solemn as a funeral. It was something like Jonathan Edwards at Northampton when the people in his hearers so wrought up and agitated that they groaned in fear and grasped the posts and braces to keep from sinking into hell and another preacher in the pulpit begged Mr. Edwards to stop. Stop Mr. Edwards and tell them of the mercy and love of God. What wonderful power in the eloquent words of an earnest man. Mr. Beecher was a gifted eloquent man and I heard him preach twice before but it was profoundly impressive upon him as the impersonation of a man of God. Later on, however, in his vindictive war upon the South he said that Sharp's rifles were better than Bibles for John Brown's men, and it was a crime to shoot at a slave holder and miss him. I was in infatuation with the man and charmed with Isaiah, "How are the mighty fallen." And still later when he charged him with adulterating during his wife and family's absence months to try the case and in two days to make up a verdict he virtually said "He is a liar and he must not do so any more." I was mortified at my own weakness in coming his idolater and yet I will worship no man again without reserve. A great man's character should be made up until after he is dead.

But I was ruminating how it is for a young man to say "I'll be damned if I do" or "I'll be damned if I don't" take the name of God in vain when it is a more convenient and forceful word than dogon or dogone or blamed and it shows a defiance of the devil and a self-conceit in the man who uses it. But it is a very expletive and when a young man is in the habit of using it he loses force. He knows that it violates manners for he does not use it in the presence of ladies or preachers or his parents. Nevertheless there are good people who think damn is a saving it. I heard a good sister the other day on Colonel Livingston, a member of congress from the Atlanta district. Last summer he was over to West Virginia to speak and help the democrats in their campaign. He ventured into a pretty hot republican town, and was haranguing and electrifying a large audience while scarifying the republicans and this fighting administration, and a half done Irish potato took him kerplum right between the eyes. It knocked off his spectacles and flattened out a mush all over his classic countenance. It surprised and shocked him of course. Recovering his glasses he wiped the sticky stuff from his face and said with an excited tone, "My friends, I have been—I have been a consistent—a consistent member of the Presbyterian church—the Presbyterian church, I say, for more than more than fifty years—yes, fifty years and have tried to live—to live in harmony with all men—with men, but if the dirty, dogone, blamed puppy who threw that potato will stand up or raise his right hand I'll be—I'll be dadblasted if I don't stop speaking long enough to come down and lick the hair and hide off him in two minutes by the clock." Nobody rose or raised a hand. The colonel resumed his broken remarks and declares that he never came as near cursing since he joined the church.

This thing of cursing is of very ancient origin. Sometimes it was done by proxy. Balak, the king of Moab, hired Balaam to curse Israel, and some of us veterans remember when we wanted to hire a cussin man to spend our wrath upon the yankees for cursed and swore when accused of being one of the disciples. It is probable he said "I'll be damned if I am," or perhaps worse. Soldiers and sailors have in all ages been profane, the very class that are in greatest danger and should have the greatest respect for their Maker. Uncle Toby, says, "Our army swore terribly in Flanders." And Uncle Toby himself swore an oath when he found the poor soldier lying and dying at his gate. "He shall not die, by God," he said, and the accusing spirit flew up to heaven with the oath and blushed as it

A consular report from Vienna gives results of the census recently taken in Austria-Hungary. It shows that the present population of the country is about 46,890,000, 19,200,000 of which is furnished by Hungary. During the last decade the population of Austria increased 9.3 percent. Minnesota is a poor place of residence for a man who does not want to support his wife and abandons her. The legislature has passed a law making wife abandonment a felony, punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than one year and not more than three, with a provision for a suspension of sentence providing the husband give bond to the state to support his wife and family. Under this law it is believed that deserting husbands can be arrested in and extradited from other states. If the law stands a proposed test it is not unlikely that other states may follow Minnesota's example. The courts have to deal with no more difficult problem than this, and the total annual expense to the public in caring for abandoned families must be enormous. So long as the husband remains in the same place with his family he can be got at and made to pay, but once out of the jurisdiction of the court, he is practically a free man.

Great is the helladotherium, for has it not survived the vicissitudes of two or more geological ages. And does its existence provide the narrators of tales about the sea serpent—that antediluvian leviathan of the deep—with badly needed evidence of their truthfulness?

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

Further Report of Alabama's Constitutional Convention.

Thirty-Fifth Day.

Ten Minute Rule Adopted—Charitable, Educational and Religious Institutions Free.

There were 121 delegates present this morning. A ten minute rule on speaking was adopted, and the meetings will hereafter last from 9:30 a. m. to 1 p. m., and from 3:30 to 6 p. m. Section 30 of the article on executive was finally adopted giving the governor the right to remove a sheriff during impeachment proceedings.

The discussion on section 5 of the article on taxation was taken up but was continued until the afternoon session in which 117 delegates participated. It was tabled. Sections 6 and 8 on the same were adopted. Section 6 exempts from taxation institutions of religious, charitable and educational nature: section 8 prohibits the state from collecting charges payable by the state from counties or corporations. Section 7 relating to city tax rate was tabled for the present and the discussion of section 9 relating to county indebtedness, was interrupted by adjournment.

Thirty-Sixth Day.

County Debt Limited to 3 1-2 Per Cent With Additional 1 1-2 Per Cent for Improvements.

One hundred and thirteen delegates began work this morning at 9:30. The committee on harmony got its first job when the article on executive was referred to it. Section 9 of the article on taxation was discussed freely and after much parliamentary practice, was adopted so that "no county shall become indebted in an amount greater than 3½ per cent of the taxable value of the property thereof," with a provision of 1½ per cent additional for buildings and bridges.

Section 10 was read before dinner and discussed after, 117 delegates participating. It refers to limiting cities and towns to 5 per cent taxation, providing that 3 per cent additional may be added for improvements. Final action was deferred. Adjourned until July 5.

Thirty-Seventh Day.

City Tax Limit Settled—Preamble Adopted and Section 1 of the Declaration of Rights.

The attendance this morning was 116 and the discussion on the city debt limit was resumed and continued into the afternoon session which was called to order by Dr. R. M. Cunningham and in which 111 delegates took part. Section 10 of the article on taxation was then adopted. It limits the taxation of towns under 6,000 population to 5 per cent including present indebtedness, and towns of more than 6,000 to 7 per cent.

The preamble and declaration of rights was then taken up. The former reads as in the old Constitution and was adopted.

Section 1 of the declaration of rights was then adopted, which reads: That all men are equally free and independent; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Thirty-Eighth Day.

A Good Day's Work—Nine Sections Adopted—Exemption Committee Reports — Juries.

One hundred and eleven delegates answered to their names at roll call Saturday morning, July 6th. It was decided to remain in session until 2 p. m. and then adjourn until 10 a. m. Monday.

The committee on exemptions made its report that the present article be re-enacted as it stands.

The convention took up the pending question, the declaration of rights, and adopted sections 3 to 11 inclusive.

Section 3 defines the state's political power. Section 4 prohibits joining church and state. Section 5 defines the liberty of the press. Section 6 defines ownership of property. Section 7 regulates rights of defendant in criminal cases. A minority report requiring statement in indictment of time and place of crime was tabled. Section 8 requires legal application of laws. Section 9 prescribes certain procedure in criminal cases. Gen. Oates offered an amendment giving a judge indictable powers in cases in which the grand jury find no true bills, but it was lost. Section 10 provides that no person shall be tried twice for the same offense. Section 11 bars no one from prosecuting civil cases.

Section 12 reads: That the rights of trial by jury shall remain inviolate. There was a minority report on this section signed by Samuel Blackwell, E. P. Wilson and T. J. Cornwell, recommending that in civil cases three-fourths of a jury should render a verdict. Discussion was in progress when adjournment was ordered.

Thirty-Ninth Day.

Jury System Not Changed—Twenty-Six Sections Adopted—Bad Day for Amendments.

Only 95 delegates were present this morning and but 87 in the afternoon, and more leaves of absence were granted. The first thing done was to rescind the resolution denying pay to absent delegates only when sick. After much debate the present jury system was left as it is by an almost unanimous vote, thus adopting section 12 of the article on declaration of rights.

In the afternoon sections 18 to 39 of the article on declaration of rights were adopted. This disposes of the entire article. An amendment was suggested to prohibit the whipping of convicts but it was lost. Gov. Oates suggested imprisonment for debt on wilful and flagrant fraud but this was tabled. The sections adopted are practically the same as in the old constitution.

HUNTSVILLE ENTERPRISES.

Incorporation papers will be filed Monday in Madison county, Lincoln county, Tennessee, and two Tennessee counties bordering on the Alabama line for an oil company with a capital of $100,000. The company is composed of several prominent business men, who are backed by New York capitalists. For several weeks past they have had agents in the field taking options on all property they could secure having indications of oil, and they have secured the rights on between 10,000 and 20,000 acres. The company intends to sink several wells.

The American Cotton Company is making arrangements to put in a dozen round bale cotton compresses in North Alabama this season.

The Gurney Handle Company will commence operations again Monday, after an idleness of two months. The capacity of the plant has been doubled.

NEW EVIDENCE.

The body of H. C. Newell, of Mildale, was found on the railroad track at Reeders last week. He was supposed to have been killed by the cars. Monday, A. J. Simmons and Geo. Bullard were arrested charged with knowing something regarding his death. It is said that Mr. Newell had $100 when he left home. When his body was found there was no money on it, and the men arrested were the last seen with the deceased.

DAMAGE AT HUNTSVILLE.

A hail, rain and heavy wind storm did a great deal of damage in Madison county Monday night. Fruit trees and corn were prostrated and buildings were blown away. The residence of R. C. Ganter in West Huntsville was blown away by the wind.

Selma, Tuscaloosa and Demopolis are to have street fairs in October.

An interesting supreme court decision in New York holds that a woman in getting off a street car must be given time to gather up her skirts, in addition to time to step down from the car platform. It is further held that it is the conductor's duty to see that her skirts are clear of any car fittings or attachments before he starts the car. If he starts before he assures himself that they are free he is guilty of negligence. The court, on the other hand, does not consider that a woman is negligent to travel upon a car with a dress so long that it will be more likely to catch upon such appliances as necessarily extend above the platform, such as bell plungers, etc.

The death in Balse of Emilie Kempin recalled an era that already seems ancient. Its date was 1889. There was then in New York City no opportunity for a woman to study law; nor had any woman advocate invaded the city, though the legislature had in 1886 legalized the admission to the bar of the gentler sex. Mme. Kempin graduated in 1886 from the University of Zurich, but meeting with opposition in her application for a law professorship she came to New York City, where she applied for admission as a law student at Columbia. Her application was refused, but she was permitted to attend the classes as a "visitor." In the fall of 1889 she founded the first women's law class in the city. Later she returned to Europe. The number of women lawyers in the metropolis is not yet great—not so great proportionally as in Boston or in the west—but enough have entered the profession to remove such action from the realm of experiment. Truly an amazing change for a single decade to have witnessed.

SUICIDED, DRIVEN CRAZY BY THE HEAT

Disastrous Floods in Michigan—C. E. Convention in Session in Cincinnati—Death in a Railroad Accident — Kansas History.

IS HER STORY TRUE?

A woman who has claimed for years that she was the eldest daughter of Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort, is dead. She was known as Sophia Adelaide, and always insisted that when an infant she was taken from her royal mother and in her place was substituted the daughter of Prince Albert by his morganatic wife, the Countess DeReuss. She is said to have received remittances frequently through a clergyman in England and when she died she tried to effect a settlement with the crown but failed. She came to this country and brought out a book, which, it is said, has been suppressed in England and Germany. It contained her contentions.

HIS ART SAVED HIM.

"Damascus" (S. R.) Dawson, who has served five years of a ten-year sentence for shooting Walter Scott, his son-in-law, has been pardoned by Governor Shaw, of Iowa. He claims to have recovered the art of making Damascus steel and of hardening copper. Capitalists who are interested in a company to develop Dawson's process secured the evidence upon which he was pardoned, as he had asserted that he would die with his secrets rather than reveal them while in prison.

THE FOURTH IN OHIO.

One of the bloodiest affrays in the history of the Pan Handle occurred at Wheeling Junction, O., on the night of the Fourth, and three Italians left a trail of blood behind their knives. The men, part of a railroad gang, met a party on the road at night and after a few words flashed stilettos, killed two men almost instantly, cut three other persons badly and fled. The two dead men were stabbed through the heart. One of the Italians was captured Friday and lynching is feared.

THE C. E. SOCIETY.

The twentieth annual convention of the Christian Endeavor Society was formally opened in Cincinnati Saturday night by President Clark of Boston. Bishop Fallows, of Chicago, presided. Secretary of State L. C. Laylin of Columbus welcomed the delegates to the state for Governor Nash, whose physician advised against his attendance. President McKinley sent a telegram. St. Louis wants the next convention.

CRAZED BY THE HEAT.

F. A. Brackett killed his wife and then shot himself at the home of their daughter in Des Moines, Iowa, on July 5th. The deceased was a man of 68 years. During the day he frequently complained that the heat was making him ill. It is believed his mind became affected.

TWO POSTAL CLERKS KILLED.

The tender of an Iowa Central passenger train jumped the track near Hampton, Ia., late Thursday afternoon, derailing three cars. Postal Clerks Kendall and McKinzie of St. Paul were killed. Two others were injured.

TOO MUCH OF WATER.

Western Michigan was visited by a disastrous cloudburst Friday and the resultant damages will amount to thousands of dollars. Both the Pierre Marquette and the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroads were crippled. Road beds were washed out in dozens of places, and a bridge at Saranac was washed away, dams in the Flat and Rough rivers were washed out and many mills along these streams will be idle for days. Grand river rose three feet and 6 inches in four hours. Great damage was done to fruit trees and growing crops in the western Michigan peach belt.

HONOR TO THE DEAD.

Thousands of sorrowing friends o ex-Governor Hazen S. Pingree, of Michigan, passed through the city hall of Detroit last Friday, where the ex-Governor's body lay in state.

It is reported that nine South American Republics will refuse to participate in the Pan-American Congress to be held in Mexico.

AN HISTORIC SPOT.

Kansas on the Fourth, officially accepted title to the site eight miles north of Courtland, where the first American flag was raised in upper Louisiana territory. The site is on what is known as Pawnee Republic, an old Indian village. Here Lieut. Zebulon M. Pike ordered the Spanish flag hauled down and the Stars and Stripes hoisted, September 29, 1806. The legislature has appropriated money to erect a monument which will be unveiled on September 29.

THE CZAR'S COMMENT.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says the czar, in approving the recommendations of the commission on the reorganization of construction of high schools, wrote on the margin of the report: "I hope earnest consideration will also be given to strengthening the religious and moral education of our youth."

That the apple crop is actually worth more in cash, annually, than the wheat crop is a fact. The entire apple crop for 1900 was 215,000,000 of barrels. These, at $2 per barrel, would mean $430,000,000. The wheat crop does not average in value much over $300,000,000. The meaning of this is that we have got the world's market for our fruit, and are exporting nearly 4,000,000 of barrels per year. These bring in the European markets nearer $4 a barrel than $2. And still the export trade is increasing every year.

Fatalities and loss of property resulting from the celebration of the Fourth will not equal last year's record. The number actually killed is but nineteen in the whole country and but $60,000 property loss by fire. The number injured is 1,611.

A boy was caught by a balloon rope during a Fourth of July celebration in Iowa and carried into the next county. The aeronaut yelled to the boy to hang on. He did so and it saved his life and brought him from his admirers a $100 purse.

DOUBLE MURDER.

A double murder occurred in Arkansas last Friday in which Jim Johns, aged 17, and neice were murdered and their bodies placed in a burning building. When the fire had been extinguished by neighbors, it was found that the girl had been stabbed to the heart and her head crushed with an axe, while Johns had his head crushed and both arms broken. There is no clew to the perpetrators of the crime.

New Postal Regulations—The Troubles in Canton—European Naval Station Re-established—Dewey Resigns — Conger Returns.

The postal department will institute a sweeping reform this week barring from second-class mail privileges the large class of periodical publications which depends largely on gift enterprises, guessing contests, nominal subscription rates for circulation. The new order will not interfere with legitimate newspapers and similar periodicals, but it will end the abuse by which numerous publications load the mails with circulars produced wholly by offers or contests that are either fraudulent in character or reduce the circulation to nominal rates. It is also likely to exclude from books which have secured admission as second-class matter. By the new regulation a vast amount of printed matter that is now paying the one cent rate will be charged eight cents a pound. The second-class mail has grown until it embraces nearly three-fourths of the entire weight of mail matter handled by the government, yet it brings in revenue of less than $4,000,000 a year out of the entire postal revenue of more than $110,000,000. While it carries about three-fourths of the weight it furnishes about one-thirtieth of the revenue. To handle and carry second-class matter costs fully $[illegible],000,000 a year more than the government receives for handling and carrying it.

The navy department has issued orders re-establishing the European station with Rear Admiral J. G. Cromwell in command. The cruiser Chicago is ordered to proceed to Rio and will be the flagship of the admiral. The Albany and Nashville have sailed from Singapore on their way for the new station. The headquarters of the squadron will be designated by Admiral Cromwell and probably will be in the Mediterranean. Admiral Cromwell at Rio has acknowledged the receipt of his orders. It is expected that the rendezvous of the ships for the assembly will be Gibraltar.

The European station, although marked on the naval maps, has not been in actual existence since the Spanish war. The limits of the station are Port Said on the east, a line running north and south through the Atlantic from the southernmost point of Greenland to Para, Brazil, thence eastward. This includes the Azores, and all of the waters of Europe and North Africa. The establishment of the European station is said to be entirely devoid of political significance and to be simply a move in the regular procedure of the navy to place the service in the same condition that it was prior to the war.

Charles G. Dawes, comptroller of the currency, has tendered his resignation to the president to take effect October 1. He has declared his intention of becoming a candidate for U. S. Senator from Illinois. It is stated on good authority that Mr. Dawes has recommended A. D. Lynch for of the insolvent bank department of the comptroller's office, as his successor. Lynch is from Indianapolis.

Hon. Edwin Conger, United States minister to China, will sail on the 17th on the Nippon Maru for his post at Pekin.

The big naval tug Fortune, now at Boston, has been ordered by the navy department to proceed to South America to Puget Sound, 14,000 miles. The trip will be one the longest on record for such a craft of this character.

The forces of the insurgent party in Bellarmino, which have been operating about Dossel, province of Zambales, have surrendered to Colonel Wint at Albay, with one thousand men and 214 guns.

BARTOW MAN QUOTES REV. BEECHER

Various Phases of Profanity Given—William the Incentive To Recount Incidents of the Bad Habit.

This horrid, horrid weather reminds me of what Henry Ward Beecher said. In his church one sweltering day in July. He took no text. He wiped the perspiration from his brow and looking solemnly at the large congregation said: "It is hot today. It is damnably hot. It is as hot as hell!" Everybody was amazed and shocked until he added: "That is the language I hear two young men use at the door of the church as I passed them. My young friends, it is not as hot as hell." Then in low, earnest tone he pictured the torments of hell and the certain fate of the wicked until the atmosphere of the church seemed to be cool and pleasant in comparison. The latter ceased to move their fans and even the body was still and solemn as a funeral. It was something like Jonathan Edwards at Northampton when he got his hearers so wrought up and alarmed that they groaned in fear and grasped the posts and braces to keep from sinking into hell, and another preacher in the pulpit begged Mr Edwards to stop. "Stop, Mr. Edwards, stop and tell them of the mercy and love of God." What wonderful power is in the eloquent words of an eloquent earnest man. Mr. Beecher was all that—a gifted, eloquent man. I heard him preach twice before the war and was profoundly impressed. I looked upon him as the impersonation of the man of God. Later on, when he began his vindictive war upon the south and said that Sharp's rifles were better than Bibles for John Brown in Kansas and it was a crime to shoot at a slave holder and miss him, I wonder at my infatuation with the man and exclaimed with Isaiah, "How are the mighty fallen." And still later, when Tilton charged him with alienating and seducing his wife and it took two months to try the case and the jury two days to make up a verdict which virtually said, "He is not guilty but he must not do so any more." I was mortified at my own weakness in becoming his idolater and resolved to worship no man again while he lives. A great man's character cannot be made up until after he is dead.

But I was ruminating how easy it is for a young man to say damn and damn it, I'll be damned and even to take the name of God in vain. Damn is a more convenient and expressive word than dogon or dingnation. Blamed and it shows a defiance of the devil and a self-conceit in the man who uses it. But it is a very handy expletive and when a young man gets in the habit of using it he rarely reforms. He knows that it is not good manners, for he does not use it in the presence of ladies or preachers or his parents. Nevertheless, there are some good people who think damn it without saying it. I heard a good story the other day on Colonel Livingston, a member of congress from the Atlanta district. Last summer he was sent over to West Virginia to speak and help the democrats in their canvass. He ventured into a pretty hot republican town and was haranguing and electrifying a large audience, and while scarifying the republicans and this fighting administration, a half done Irish potato took him kerplum right between the eyes. It knocked off his spectacles and flattened them mush all over his classic countenance. It surprised and shocked him of course. Recovering his glasses he wiped the sticky stuff from his face and said with an excited tone "My friends, I have been—I have been a consistent—a consistent member of the Presbyterian church—the Presbyterian church, I say, for more than more than fifty years—yes, fifty years, and have tried to live—tried to live in harmony with all men—with men, but if the dirty, cogoned, blamed puppy who threw that potato will stand up or raise his right hand I'll be—I'll be dadblasted if I don't stop speaking long enough to come down and lick the hair and hide off him in two minutes by the clock." Nobody rose or raised a hand, the colonel resumed his broken remarks. He declares that he never came as near cursing since he joined the church.

This thing of cursing is of very ancient origin. Sometimes it was done by proxy. Balak, the king of Moab hired Balaam to curse Israel, and some of us veterans remember when we wanted to hire a cussin man to pound our wrath upon the yankees. Peter cursed and swore when accused of being one of the disciples. It is probable that he said "I'll be damned if I am," or perhaps worse. Soldiers and sailors have in all ages been profane. They are the very class that are in greatest need of and should have the greatest respect for their Maker. Uncle Toby says, "Our army swore terribly in Flanders." And Uncle Toby himself swore an oath when he found the poor soldier lying and dying at his gate. "He shall not die, by God," he said, and the accusing spirit flew up to heaven with the oath and blushed as it Recovering his glasses he wiped the sticky stuff from his face and said with an excited tone: "My friends, I have been—I have been a consistent, a consistent member of the Presbyterian church—the Presbyterian church, I say, for more than—more than fifty years—yes, fifty odd years and have tried to live—tried to live in harmony with all men—with all men except the dirty, dogond, dadblamed puppy who threw that potato will stand up or raise his right hand. I'll be dadblasted if I don't stop speaking long enough to comb down and trim the hair and hide off of him in two minutes by the clock." As nobody rose or raised a hand, the colonel resumed his broken remarks, but declares that he never came as near cursing as when he joined the church.

The habit of cursing is of very ancient origin. Sometimes it was done by proxy. Balak, the king of Moab, hired Balaam to curse Israel, and some of us veterans remember when we, too, wanted to hire a cussin man to expend our wrath upon the yankees. Peter cursed and swore when accused of being one of the disciples. It is probable that he said "I'll be damned if I am" or perhaps worse. Soldiers and sailors have in all ages been profane—the very class that are in greatest peril and should have the greatest reverence for their Maker. Uncle Toby says, "Our army swore terribly in Flanders." And Uncle Toby himself swore an oath when he found the sick soldier lying and dying at his gate. "He shall not die, by God," he said, and the accusing spirit flew up to heaven with the oath and blushed as he gave it in. The recording angel wrote it down and dropped a tear upon the word and blotted it out forever." That is beautiful, isent it? Verily, charity hideth a multitude of sins.

But this is enough on this subject. It is too hot to work in the garden, and so I get in the shade of the vines on my verandah and ruminate. Judge Griggs, our honored member of congress, tells that story on Colonel Livingston and he told another that will make the old men forget that it is hot, for they never get too old to enjoy any story that has a pretty woman in it. One of the last cases brought before the judge was a young unsophisticated country boy who was charged with an assault upon a bonnie country girl in that he had caught her at the spring and hugged and kissed her against her will. Her mother saw it from the piazza and heard her scream and saw him run away to the field where he was plowing. She was very indignant, and prosecuted him. She was the witness and so was the girl, but the girl dident seem very vindictive. She said he dident hurt her, but took her by surprise. She had filled her bucket and was about to go back when he caught her, hugged her and kissed her right on the mouth. The solicitor closed his case. The young man was put up to make his statement, and all he said was she looked so sweet and pretty he couldent help it, and he dident believe Miss Molly was very mad about it nohow, for she went off singing of a hyme. "What hyme was she singing?" asked the judge. "I don't know," he said. "What hyme were you singing, Miss Molly?" asked the judge. She smiled and said it was "The Lord Will Provide." The judge charged the jury very mildly and told them that an assault implied malice, etc., but as the jury couldent see where the malice came in, they came back with this verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty, as there was no malice or hate in it, and we recommend him to the mercy of the court." This story reminds me of John Riley's verdict in the Pass case. Good old John Riley, the foreman of The Rome Courier's pressroom for years and years, and the foreman of the jury in the case of the state against Romulus Pass for hog stealing. Pass had been suspected of killing Wallis Warren's shoats as they ran in the woods, and so Wallis laid for him and one evening about dusk, when he heard a rifle shot, he slipped up and caught Pass in the very act of putting the shoat in a sack. Wallis dident go to the war and managed to save his stock. Pass went, and left his wife and three little children to the mercy of God and the community. When he returned he found there was nothing left to live on, and one of the children had died. Judge Wright volunteered to defend him, and introduced no evidence, but had the last speech. I will never forget the tender pathos of that speech—his picture of a poor soldier returning home to find desolation and despair. He never alluded to the evidence, but had the jury and the court in tears. The judge charged them as fairly as he could, and they retired. In a brief time they came in with this verdict: "Whereas, the late unhappy war reduced many of our brave soldiers and their families to want and poverty by reason of which they were forced at times to wander in the woods for such game as they could find in order to keep the wolf from the door and their little ones from starvation; therefore, we, the jury, find the defendant not guilty. John Riley, foreman."

"By gracious!" said Wallis, "they found Pass guilty and then pardoned him." Judge Wright never lost a case where he had the last speech and a woman or a poor man was his client.

But it is getting a little cooler now as the sun nears the horizon. I must stop and turn the water loose on my garden. The city has no water meters yet, and I can steal water with impunity, but, as the nigger preacher said to his flock, "You musent be cotched stealin' chickens—cotched, I say."—Bill Arp in Atlanta Constitution.

A statistician has taken a census of American authors, and found that they number 7500, adding to his published report some comment showing that he is quite amazed at their multitude. The New York Mail and Express, on the other hand, is astonished to learn that there are so few. Offhand, it would seem as if there were at least 7500 young men and maidens, old men and matrons, busy with the writing of books east of the Alleghanies alone. There are now large tracts of author-producing soil in the Middle West, the Southwest and on the Pacific slope. These, added to New England, where there is an author to every few square miles—Boston and suburbs alone having 3333—make such a large area that, exclaims the Mail and Express, it is amazing to learn that there are in this great country only 7500 people all told who write books for a living, for pleasure, or in the service of literature, science and art.

Physiognomists assert that the character of a person is shown by the size and shape of his ears. Dr. Keith, an English specialist, says that as the result of studying the ears of more than 40,000 people, including 800 criminals and 2000 insane persons, besides those of 300 animals, he is forced to conclude that the ears give us no clue to personal traits.

OLD MERRIMAC RIVER CHIEFS.

An Interesting Story of the Last of the Sachems.

Few Massachusetts families—even those with real blue blood in their veins—know that Passaconway and his band of Indians were the leaders in high society in the Merrimac River Valley. But that is so. They settled on the river banks and some of its picturesque islands, and in 1628 there was a great wedding for those days, the bride being the chief's daughter, Witamu, and the groom none other than the sachem of the Saugus. The story of all these things, and many others of interest, was told by Dr. Charles Cowley, of Lowell, at a stated meeting of the New England Historic Genealogical Society.

Passaconway seems to have had close relations with the Government authorities of the white settlers. In 1632, without waiting for a requisition, he caused a murderer to be arrested and delivered to the colonial authorities for punishment. In 1642, suspecting a conspiracy to extirpate the English the colonists sent armed men to arrest the Indians, forty being selected to get Passaconway. They could not find him, but got his son and led him along with a rope. In 1649 the Merrimac Indians were visited by Eliot; they and Passaconway heard the missionary willingly. In 1662, Pasaconway petitioned the Legislature for part of the land he and his people formerly occupied, and the petition was granted. The date of Pasaconway's death and the place of his burial were alike unknown.

He was succeeded by his son, Wonolonset, the last of the Merrimac River sachems. He obtained a grant of 100 acres of land from the Legislature on the ground that he had a great many children and no planting ground, but in 1665 he gave up this grant for the possession of an island in the Merrimac of much smaller area. The conversion of Wonolonset to Christianity was described.

In 1675, when King Phillip's war broke out, Wonolonset and his braves took to the woods. This only intensified the fears of the colonists, and Captain Mosely and 100 men were sent in pursuit. The fort occupied by Wonolonset was found deserted, but the soldiers barbarously burned all the wigwams, also destroying all the dried fish the Indians had prepared for the winter. The Indians were in the woods, and wanted to fire on the troops, but Wonolonset restrained them, and then took his men still further into the wilderness. On one occasion thirty of them were treacherously massacred in the presence of Wonolonset. But this did not prevent Wonolonset from subsequently giving information to the colonists of the approach of a party of hostile Indians. Finally, Wonolonset and his men went to Canada and there joined the St. Francis Indians. His friendly services were tardily and poorly appreciated by the colonists, many of whom did not distinguish between friendly and hostile Indians.

For some years Wonolonset was provided for by the Province. He died in 1696. In a few days, the speaker said, it was purposed to cut an inscription to his memory in a boulder on one of the islands of the Merrimac.—Boston Transcript.

The Worship of the Golden Calf.

When I saw a dying broker clutch the cyphered tape at the ticker as he watched his fortune ebbing away; when the maddened throng, in their frenzy lost to all sense of the mystery of life and death, hustled out the body of the dead broker that there might be more room for stampede in the sagging of the market; when the gilded sign was erased from the marble slab, announcing another failure; when I saw strong men tremble with lip and eyelid, and burst into tears; when I saw the haggard faces of grey-haired women in weeds and the fading blight upon the beauty of American girls; when the storm of wild and piteous shrieks filled the air, I thought if these scenes and emotions were connected with anything else—it would be called religious or political fanaticism.

We call it trade—business—financial "operations;" the genius of gambling is deified and on the altar glitters the grinning golden calf. Frequent warnings may be of no avail, but the handwriting flashed forth on the heavy clouds, proclaiming to vaulting ambition, o'er leaping itself, Halt!—The National Magazine.

Where the Automobile is Used.

With the increase of endurance and the perfection of motive power and mechanical parts, the automobile has grown popular. A crippled beggar in Paris, who formerly propelled himself by hand in a cart, recently bought a one-horse power machine, and is now making money by running errands. A public service is to be established in Honolulu. Routes are being laid out in Madagascar. The King of England is having a car de luxe built in Paris. Socialists are to make a propagandist tour through Pennsylvania in a machine of their own. Emperor William has been offering cups for contests. The London and New York fire departments are both using autos, and a self-moving fire engine has been in use for years in Hartford, Conn. The State Department of this country has requested our consuls abroad to furnish it with the rules governing the operation of automobiles in foreign cities. The list of significant things is almost endless.—The World's Work.

Among other lines of manufacture in which Baltimore leads the world is that of making showcases, and not only does Baltimore's output exceed that of any other city on the globe, but it was also one of the first to construct this useful article.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

DISCOURSE BY THE EMINENT DIVINE LAST SUNDAY.

Subject: Control Your Temper—Why One May Have a Wholesome Indignation—Sins That We Should Be Angry With—Pity the Sinner.

[Copyright 1901.]

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A delicate and difficult duty is by Dr. Talmage in this discourse urged upon all and especially upon those given to quick temper; text, Ephesians iv, 26, "Be ye angry and sin not."

Equipoise of temper, kindness, patience, forbearance, are extolled by most of the radiant pens of inspiration, but my text contains that which at first sight is startling. A certain kind of anger is approved; aye, we are commanded to indulge in it. The most of us have no need to cultivate high temper, and how often we say things and do things under affronted impulse which we are sorry for when perhaps it is too late to make effective apology! Why, then, should the apostle Paul dip his pen in the ink horn and trace upon paper for all ages, the injunction, "Be ye angry and sin not?"

My text compends a wholesome indignation. It discriminates between the offence and the offender, the sin and the sinner, the crime and the criminal.

To illustrate, alcoholism has ruined more fortunes, blasted more homes, destroyed more souls than any evil that I think of. It pours a river of poison and fire through the nations. Millions have died because of it, and millions are dying now, and others will die. Intemperance is an old sin. The great Cyrus, writing to the Lacedemonians of himself, boasted of many of his qualities, among others that he could drink and bear more wine than his distinguished brother. Louis X. and Alexander the Great died drunk. The Parliament of Edinburgh in 1661 is called in history "the drunken Parliament." Hugh Miller, first stonemason and afterward a world renowned geologist, writes of the drinking habits of his day, saying: "When the foundation was laid, they drank. When the walls were leveled for laying, they drank. When the building was finished, they drank. When an apprentice joined, they drank." In the eighteenth century the giver of an entertainment boasted that none of the guests went home sober. Noah, the first ship captain, was wrecked not in the ark, for that was safely landed, but he was wrecked with strong drink. Every man or woman rightly constructed will blush with indignation at the national and international and hemispheric and planetary curse. It is good to be aroused against it. You come out of that condition a better man or a better woman. Be ye angry at that abomination, and the more anger the more exaltation to character. But that aroused feeling becomes sinful when it extends to the victim of this great evil. Drunkenness you are to hate with a vivid hatred, but the drunkard you are to pity, to help to extricate.

Just take into consideration that there are men and women who once were as upright as yourself who have been prostrated by alcoholism. Perhaps it came of a physician's prescription for the relief of pain, a recurrence of the pain calling for a continuance of the remedy. Perhaps the grandfather was an inebriate, and the temptation to inebriety, leaping over a generation, has swooped on this unfortunate. Perhaps it was a very gradual chaining of the man with the beverage which was thought to be a servant, when one day it announced itself master. Be humble now, and admit that there is a strong probability that under the same circumstances you yourself might have been captured. The two appropriate emotions for you to allow are indignation at the intoxicant which enthralled and sympathy for the victim. Try to get the sufferer out of his present environment. Recommend any hygienic relief that you know of, and, above all, implore the divine rescue for the struggle in which so many of the noblest and grandest have been worsted. Do not give yourself up to too many philippics about what the man ought to have been and ought to have done. While your cheek flushes with wrath at the foe that has brought the ruin, let your eye be mositened with tears of pity for the sufferer. In that way you will have fulfilled the injuction of the text, "Be ye angry and sin not."

There is another evil the abhorrence of which you are all called to, and it is on the increase—the gambling practice. Recent developments show that much of this devastation is being wrought in ladies' parlors. It is an evil which sometimes is as polite and gracious as it is harmful. Indeed there never were so many people trying to get money without earning it. But it is a haggard transgression that comes down to us from the past, blighting all its way.

I have seen in the archives of the nation in this national capital a large book in which one of the early Presidents of the United States kept an account in his own handwriting of gains and losses at playing cards, on one page the gains and on the other the losses, and there are many pages. In other days many of national reputation went from the halls of Congress and the Senate chamber to spend the night in notorious gambling saloons.

In Spain a don lost in twenty-four hours what equals $12,000,000. Twenty years ago it was estimated that the average gambling exchange of money throughout Christendom exceeded $123,100,000,000 a year, but statistics twenty years ago would be tame compared with the present statistics if we could find any one able enough at figures to tabulate them. It is all the same spirit of gambling whether the instruments are cards or the clicking chips or the turning wheel or the bids of the Stock Exchange, where people sell what they never owned and fail because they cannot get paid for it. A prominent banker tells me that he thinks 50,000 people were financially prostrated by the recent insanities in Wall street. Here and there a case is reported, but the vast majority suffer in silence. The children are brought home from school; the wardrobe will be denied replenishment; the table will have scant supply; wild generosity will be turned into grim want. Forty years from now will be felt the disaster of last month's black Thursday.

But, while you are hotly indignant against the crime, how do you feel about those who were fleeced and slain? They did not know that their small boat was so near the maelstrom. Some of them were born with a tendency to recklessness and experiment and hazard. They inherited a disposition to tempt chance. Do not heap on them additional discouragements. Do not deride their losses. Help them to start again. Show them that there are more fortunes to be gained than have yet been gathered, and that with God for their friend they will be provided for here, and through the Saviour's mercy they may reign forever in the land where there are no losses and infinite gains. While you may redden in the face at the fact that gambling is the disgraceful mother of multitudious crimes, of envies, jealousies, revenges, quarrels, cruelties, falsehoods, forgeries, suicides, murders and despair, be careful what you say to the victim of the vice and what you do. He needs more sympathy than the man who caste up from inebriety and debauch and assassination, for many such repent and are saved, but confirmed gamblers hardly ever reform. During the course of a prolonged ministry I have seen thousands redeemed, many of them who were clear gone in sin, by Almighty grace rescued. In all parts of this land and in some parts of other lands I have seen those who were given up as incorrigible and lost recovered for God and heaven, but how many confirmed gamblers have I seen converted from their evil ways? A thousand? No. Five hundred? No. Fifty? No. Two? No. One? No. I read in a book of one such rescued. I have no doubt there have been other cases, but no evil does its work so thoroughly and eternally as gambling. Such almost hopelessness of reformation ought to call forth from you deeper sympathy than you feel for any other unfortunate. Pity, by all means, for those who, shipwrecked and bruised among the timbers, have nevertheless climbed up to the fisherman's cabin and found warmth and shelter, but more pity for those who never reach shore, but are dashed to death in the breakers. Be angry at the sin, but sympathize with its victims.

There is another sin that we are oftentimes called to be angry with, and that is fraud. We all like honesty, and when it is sacrificed we are vehement in denunciation. We hope that the detective will soon come upon the track of the absconding bank official, of the burglar who blew up the safe, of the clerk who skilfully changed the figures in the account book, of the falsifier who secured the loan on valueless property, of the agent who because of his percentage wrongfully admits a man to the benefit of a life insurance policy when his heart is ready to stop and who comes from an ancestry characteristically short lived. One act of fraud told of in big headlines in the morning papers rightfully arouses the nation's wrath. It is the interest of every good man and good woman who reads of the crime to have it exposed and punished. Let it go unscathed, and you put a premium on fraud, you depress public morals, you induce those who are on the fence between right and wrong to go down on the wrong side, and you put the business of the world on a down grade. The constabulary and penitentiary must do their work. But while the merciless and the godless cry, "Good for him—I am glad he is within the prison doors!" be it your work to find out if that man is worth saving and what were the causes of his moral overthrow. Perhaps he started in business life under a tricky firm, who gave him wrong notions of business integrity; perhaps there was a combination of circumstances almost unparalleled for temptation, perhaps there were alleviations, perhaps he was born wrong and never got over it, perhaps he did not realize what he was doing, and if you are a merciful man you will think of other perhapses which, though they will not excuse, will extenuate. Perhaps he has already repented and is washed in the blood of the Lamb, and is as sure of heaven as you are.

What an opportunity you have now for obeying my text! You were angry at the misdemeanor, but you are hopeful for the recovery of the recalcitrant. Blessed all prison reformers! Blessed are those Governors and Presidents who are glad when they have a chance to pardon! Blessed the forgiving father who welcomes home the prodigal! Blessed the dying thief whom the Lord took with Him to glory, saying, "This day shalt thou be with Me in paradise."

There is another evil that we ought to abhor while we try to help the victim, and that is infidelity. It snatches the life preserver from the man afloat and affords not so much as a spar or a plank as substitute. It would extinguish the only light that has ever been kindled for the troubled and the lost. Let the spirit of infidelity take hold of a neighborhood, and in that town the marriage relation is a farce, and good morals give place to all styles of immorals. Let it take possession of this earth, and there would be no virtue left in all the world's circumference.

I think if a famous infidel of our time instead of being taken away instantaneously had died in his bed after weeks and months of illness he would have revoked his teachings and left for his beloved family consolations which they could not find in obsequies at which not one word of holy Scripture was read or at Fresh Pond crematory, where no Christian benediction was pronounced. I do not positively say that in a prolonged illness there would have been a retraction, but I think there would.

I say to all young men hoping to achieve financial, moral or religious success, control your tempers. Do not let criticism or rebuff defeat you. Verdi, the great musician, applied to become a student in the Conservatory of Music at Milan, and he was rejected by the director, who said that he could make nothing of the newcomer, as he showed no disposition for music. But the criticism did not exasperate or defeat him. The most of those who have largely succeeded in all departments were characterized by self control. In battle they could calmly look at the bomb thrown at their feet, wondering whether it would explode. In commercial life, when panics smote the city, these men were placid, while others were yelling themselves hoarse at the Stock Exchange. While others nearly swooned because a certain stock had gone 400 points down they calmly waited until it would get 100 points up. While the opposing attorney in the courtroom frothed at the mouth with rage because of something said on the other side he of the equipoise put a glass of water to his lips in refreshment and proceeded with the remark, "As I was saying when the gentleman interrupted me." Self control! What a glorious thing! We want it in the doctor feeling the pulse of one desperately ill; we want it in the engineer when the headlight of another train comes round the curve on the same track; we want it in Christian men and women in times when so much in church and state seems going to demolition—self control!

Surpassing all other characters in the world's biography stands Jesus Christ, wrathful against sin, merciful to the sinner. Witness His behavior toward the robed ruffians who demanded capital punishment for an offending woman—denunciation for their sinful hypocrisy, pardon for her sweet penitence. He did not speak of Herod as "his highness" or "his royal highness," but dared to compare him to a cunning fox, saying, "Go ye and tell that fox." But, alert to the cry of suffering, He finds ten lepers, and to how many of the ten awful invalids did He give convalescence and health! Ten. Rebuking Pharisaism in the most compressed sentence in all the vocabulary of anathema: "Ye serpents! Ye generation of vipers! How can ye escape the damnation of hell?" Yet looking upon Peter with such tenderness that no word was spoken, and not a word was needed, for the look spoke louder than words. "And the Lord looked upon Peter, and Peter went out and wept bitterly."

Defying the mightiest Government of the world, the Roman Government, yet rubbing His hand just below the forehead of the blind until the optic nerve of him who was born sightless is created, and the sunlight has two new paths to tread. Best illustration the world ever saw of anger without sin, anger against the abominations which have mauled and blasted the earth from its deepest cavern to its highest cliff, but so much pity for the sinning and suffering nations that He allowed them to transfix Him upon two pieces of wood nailed across each other on a day that was dark as night, the windows of heaven shut because the immortals could not bear to look down upon the assassination of the loveliest being that ever walked the Mere of the lakes or without pillow or blanket slept on the cold mountains.

Like Him, let us hate iniquity with complete hatred, but like Him may we help those who are overthrown and be willing to suffer for their restoration. Then, although at the opening of this discourse our text may have seemed to command us to do an impossible thing, we will at the close of this sermon, with a prayer to God for help, be more rigid and determined than ever before against that which is wrong, while at the same time we shall feel so kindly toward all the erring and work so hard for their rescue that we will realize that we have scaled the Alpine, the Himalayan height of my text, which enjoins, "Be ye angry and sin not."

THE SABBATH SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JULY 14.

Subject: Beginning of Sin and Redemption, Gen. iii., 1-15—Golden Text, Rom. v., 20—Memory Verses, 14, 15—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

1. "The serpent." That it was a real serpent is evident from the plain and artless style of the history, and from the many allusions made to it in the New Testament. "More subtle." Serpents are proverbial for wisdom. Matt 10: 16. But these reptiles were at first probably far superior in beauty as well as in sagacity to what they are in their present state. "He said." There was in the bosoms of the first pair no principle of evil to work upon, and this solicitation to sin came from without, as in the analogous case of Jesus Christ (Matt. 4: 3), and as the tempter could not assume the human form, there being only Adam and Eve in the world, the agency of an inferior creature had to be employed. "Unto the woman." Though unless and holy, she was a free agent liable to be tempted. "Hath God said." Is it true that He hath restricted you in using the fruits of this delightful place? This is not like One so good and kind. Surely there is some mistake. He insinuated a doubt as to her sense of the Divine will.

2. "We may eat." Eve resists the first assault by looking at the largeness of her privileges. God has given us the fruit of the trees of the garden, there is a vast amount of pleasure for us, but Satan led her to look at the one forbidden thing.

3. "The tree." The tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Gen. 2: 17. It was placed in the garden as a moral test. The object was not to cause their downfall, but to test their integrity. Satan tempts; God tests. Tempting implies a desire that the tempted should yield and sin; testing implies the desire that the tested should stand the test. "Shall not eat." Eve shows that she is not in doubt regarding the restrictions placed upon them, or the penalty that would follow if the command were disobeyed.

4. "Shall not surely die." Satan now comes out in his true character as "the father of lies." In this he tacitly appeals to the fact of her own immortality, a fact which she may well be supposed to be aware of. But God referred to spiritual death, or separation from Himself—and the devil knew this.

5. "God doth know." The tempter reflects upon God, as though He were unwilling to permit them to enjoy the best things. "Opened." And so they were to the fact that they had lost the purity of their moral character. Instead of being open to new visions of happiness, wisdom, glory and knowledge, they were open only to sin, misery and remorse. See vs. 7, 11. "Shall be as God" (R. V.) The object of the tempter appears to have been to persuade our first parents that they should, by eating of this fruit, become wise and powerful as God, and be able to exist forever, independently of Him.

6. "Good for food." Corresponding to "the lust of the flesh." "A delight to the eyes" (R. V.) An appeal to the higher sense of beauty, "the lust of the eye." "Desired to make one wise." "The pride of life." See 1 John 2: 16. She was at last completely overthrown. The confluence of all these streams made such a current as swept the feeble will completely away, and blind, dazed, deafened by the rush of the stream, Eve was carried over the falls as a man might be over Niagara. "Unto her husband." Adam sinned with his eyes open. Paul says he was not deceived. 1 Tim. 2: 14.

7. "Knew that they were naked." Proving that they were no longer innocent, for innocence is a stranger to shame. They were conscious of guilt and unworthiness in each other's eyes, and in the sight of God. "Made themselves." Instead of turning to God for forgiveness they endeavored by their own efforts to cover their sin and shame.

8. "Heard the voice." The voice is properly used here, for as God is an infinite Spirit, and can not be confined to any form, so He can have no personal appearance. They heard the sound of the divine going, such as was usual when God appeared to them and conversed with them. "Cool of the day." The evening, the customary time of worship. "Hid themselves." Shame, remorse, fear—a sense of guilt—feelings to which they had hitherto been strangers, disordered their minds, and led them to shun Him whose approach they used to welcome.

9. "Where art thou?" This question proved two things. 1. That man was lost. 2. That God had come to seek. Thus we see man's sin, and God's amazing grace.

10. "I was afraid." Sin makes cowards of men. "Because," etc. Adam's reply is full of evasion. He confesses not his sin, but only his fear and shame at his bodily nakedness. The question just asked had given him opportunity to confess his sin. "I hid myself." Adam's apron could not screen him from the eye of God, and he could not stand in His presence naked; therefore he fled to hide himself. This is what conscience will always do; it will cause man to hide himself from God.

11. "Who told thee?" In admitting that he was afraid and naked he unconsciously acknowledged his sin.

12. "The woman." Here we find him actually laying the blame of his shameful fall on the circumstances in which God had placed him, and thus, indirectly, on God Himself. This is ever the way with fallen man; every one and every thing is blamed but self.

13. "Beguiled." Deceived me by flattering lies. This sin committed by Adam and Eve was heinous and aggravated. It was not simply eating an apple, but a love of self, dishonor to God, ingratitude to a benefactor, disobedience to the best of Masters—a preference of the creature to the Creator.

14. "Thou art cursed." It is believed by many that before the fall the serpent went upright, and had an entirely different form from that what he now has; others think that his form was the same, but that after the fall "his attitude became a badge of shame and repulsiveness." From being a model of grace and elegance it has become the type of all that is odious, disgusting and low.

15. "Enmity." This enmity still exists; mankind loathes and detests everything of the serpent kind. "Thy seed." Evil spirits and wicked men. "Her seed." An allusion to Christ and His church. "Bruise thy head." The serpent's poison is lodged in its head, and a bruise on that part is fatal. Thus fatal shall be the stroke which Satan shall receive from Christ; though it is probable he did not at first understand the nature and extent of his doom. "Bruise his heel." The serpent wounds the heel that crushes him, and so Satan would be permitted to afflict the humanity of Christ and bring suffering and persecution on His people.

The New York Independent states that we have still to estimate the relative value of wheat and fruit as food. There is a growing conviction that we have used too little fruit with our daily diet. A city family, with a meat bill running to the hundreds of dollars, and a pastry bill of half that amount, will get on with two or three barrels of apples per year. This habit, however, is rapidly changing. We are growing frugivorous and less carnivorous.

THE Fourth was celebrated at Clanton in fine style. It is estimated that about 5000 persons were on the grounds. The Thorsby Cornet band and the String band from Montgomery discoursed fine music, refreshments were of good quality and plentiful. Peace and plenty reigned, everyone enjoyed themselves and the hope was expressed that Clanton would in future continue to make this the great day of the year.

WE are sorry that Mr. L. H. Reynolds should have been so ill-advised as to offer the ordinance attempting to interfere with newspaper proprietors in the conduct of their business. Mr. Reynolds apparently does not recognize that newspapers are private enterprises entirely dependant upon the good will of the public. The smaller the publication the more it is dependant upon the exchange of its advertising space for its partial support. A country newspaper derives a large proportion of its income from advertisers in neighboring towns, and if it can make an advertising contract with the railroads for transportation it is possible to secure the necessary advertising from those places. It cuts both ways, Mr. Reynolds, advertising space is for value received. There are many good reasons why members of the legislature and others, who, as Mr. Reynolds justly remarks, are no doubt largely influenced by the acceptance of free passes, should be debarred from accepting such favors from railroad and other corporations, but none of them apply to the newspaper fraternity.

A Narrow Escape.

On Wednesday morning George Kilgore, about eighteen years old, son of Sheriff Kilgore, had a narrow escape from death. Train No. 2 was standing in the depot, crossing it he jumped in front of No. 1 as it was passing through at reduced speed. He was hurled a considerable distance and picked up insensible, but soon after recovered sufficiently to be able to walk home.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

The constitutional convention on Saturday completed its thirty-eighth working day. This leaves it twelve more days, supposing it is to finish its work in the fifth day limit prescribed by the Legislature. It is quite apparent, however, that the work can never be finished in that time, and it is generally thought that the convention will do well to get through its work by the 1st of August. Many of the delegates think it will be the 15th of August before they wend their way homewards and bid a tearful adieu to the hot blasts of Montgomery.

The Legislature appropriated $50,000 for the expenses of the convention. When this is spent the delegates will not work without pay, for the convention has the power to appropriate another $50,000 if necessary to pay their expenses. The convention is the supreme power of the State. They can truthfully say "we are the people." As a matter of law, they have the power to make any constitution they please and force it upon the people, though, as a matter of fact, they will not do this, but will submit it to them for their approval. —Age-Herald.

PERPETUAL MOTION.

their utmost to make it a day long to be remembered. On the hills we saw the camp of the U. S. soldiers, the Cliff House and Golden Gate Park; we passed the great iron works of John Riston & Sons, where the "Oregon" was built, and we sailed close to the side of that magnificent vessel itself lying securely at anchor not far from the spot where she first entered the water. Like many a human being, after being tempest-tossed around the world, she was again at home. A dainty lunch was served on board and in the afternoon we returned to the city. We were indebted to the San Francisco "Call" for this delightful trip and cannot adequately express our thanks. At night there was a reception at the Press Club, and a visit to the "Call" office which was illuminated from top to bottom of its eighteen stories in honor of the Alabama Press Association. This was the second time it had been so illuminated, the first occasion being the visit of President McKinley a few weeks ago.

Next morning "The Call" again was our host and escorted the party on board the "Oregon" where a pleasant time was spent inspecting this man-o'-war. Then an excursion was made to Golden Gate Park and the Cliff House. At night the Association, under the guidance of the police, went through China Town, one of the most notorious spots on the face of the earth. Many curious scenes were there witnessed while John Chinaman looked on in amazement at this invasion of his domain by such a large crowd. Opium joints, the theatre, the joss house, and the stores were all visited in turn and it was past midnight ere we returned to the hotel.

Saturday morning at 6:30 we were again on the train, arriving at 8:10 at Palo Alto, whence we drove to the Leland Stanford University. This magnificent monument to a departed son is proving an educational blessing to thousands. At 9:45 we arrived at San Jose, one of the most beautiful of Californian cities. Alighting from the train we at once entered carriages, forming a procession more than half a mile in length. Along fine wide streets, with elegant residences on each side embowered in masses of immense geraniums and other flowers, we drove along, and after visiting the store house for prunes and apricots, proceeded through interminable orchards to Campbell, where we were regaled with an excellent lunch. Thence back to San Jose, which we left with regret, and after a two hours run reached Del Mont with its handsome hotel and beautiful grounds. Here we again entered a carriage and had a most delightful drive for eighteen miles along the beach, the very verge of this western continent, with the glorious Pacific at our feet thundering its mighty surges upon the rock-bound coast. 'Twas a magnificent spectacle, the declining sun gently falling to rest upon the deep, the surf breaking in clouds of spray thrown high into the air, while we gazed into infinity across the placid bosom of the mighty ocean. Magnificent Pacific, I love thee, many of my most cherished memories are connected with your fathomless depths and sun-kissed shores.

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucuous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "SNUFFLES the GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

"SNUFFLES" is the only perfect CATARRH CURE ever made and is now recognized as the only safe and positive cure for that annoying and disgusting disease. It cures all inflammation quickly and permanently and is also wonderfully quick to relieve HAY FEVER or COLD in the HEAD.

CATARRH when neglected often leads to CONSUMPTION—"SNUFFLES" will save you if you use it at once. It is no ordinary remedy, but a complete treatment which is positively guaranteed to cure CATARRH in any form or stage if used according to the directions which accompany each package. Don't delay but send for it at once, and write full particulars as to your condition, and you will receive special advice from the discoverer of this wonderful remedy regarding your case without cost to you beyond the regular price of "SNUFFLES" the "GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE."

Sent prepaid to any address in the United States or Canada on receipt of One Dollar. Address Dept C 955 EDWIN B GILES & COMPANY, 2330 and 2332 Market Street, Philadelphia.

Editor Banner—Please give me space in your paper for a few words. The health in our community is very good. We have good crops though everything is a little late; but it is now spreading itself. We have had plenty of rain at present, though the season will not stay good long.

We had a nice time on the Fourth at Dorminy's mill; we seined the pond and caught about 100 lbs. of fish and what another dinner we did have. We also had plenty of ice cold lemonade to settle our dinner with.

No Noxious Doses, No Weakening of the Nerves. A Pleasant and Positive Cure for the Liquor Habit.

It is now generally known and understood that drunkenness is a disease and not weakness. A body filled with poison, and nerves completely shattered by periodical or constant use of intoxicating liquors, requires an antidote capable of neutralizing and eradicating this poison, and destroying the craving for intoxicants. Sufferers may now cure themselves at home without publicity or loss of time from business by this wonderful "HOME GOLD CURE" which has been perfected after many years of close study and treatment of inebriates. The faithful use according to directions of this wonderful discovery is positively guaranteed to cure the most obstinate case, no matter how hard a drinker. Our records show the marvelous transformation of thousands of Drunkards into sober, industrious and upright men.

WIVES CURE YOUR HUSBANDS!! CHILDREN CURE YOUR FATHERS!! this remedy is in no sense a nostrum but is a specific for this disease only, and is so skillfully devised and prepared that it is thoroughly soluble and pleasant to the taste, so that it can be given in a cup of tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking it. Thousands of Drunkards have cured themselves with this priceless remedy, and as many more have been cured and made temperate men by having the "CURE" administered by loving friends and relatives without their knowledge in coffee or tea, and believe today that they discontinued drinking of their own free will. DO NOT WAIT. Do not be deluded by apparent and misleading "improvement." Drive out the disease at once and for all time. The "HOME GOLD CURE" is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, thus placing within reach of every body a treatment more effectual than others costing $25 to $50. THE SOLDIER BOYS.

The Second Infantry, Alabama National Guard, composed of the Montgomery Blues, Montgomery Greys and the companies of Prattville, Wetumpka, Luverne, Selma, Demopolis, Opelika, Tuskegee, Tuskaloosa and Phoenix City, has gone into camp at Eufaula in grounds on the banks of the Chattahoochee river especially prepared for their reception. Col. A. A. Wiley is in command.

The Third Regiment, composed of: first battalion—Birmingham Rifles, Jefferson volunteers, Woodlawn Light Infantry, Bessemer Rifles; second battalion—Oxford Rifles, Anniston Rifles, Gadsden Rifles, Talladega Light Infantry; third battalion—Huntsville Rifles, Decatur Rifles, Florence Rifles, Jasper Rifles, will go into camp at Birmingham this week, Col. E. L. Higdon in command.

NOW DOING BUSINESS.

The Empire Coal & Coke Company has begun the shipment of coal from its mines in Walker county, near Democrat. The nine miles of railroad between Burgin and Democrat, have been completed and already between 150 and 175 tons of coal are being shipped daily from the Empire mines. On account of the hardness of the coal and its special qualities, it is announced that the company has secured contracts for the future. The output will be increased rapidly, until it becomes about 1,000 tons per day. The company has fourteen thousand acres of land. The seam being worked is the well known Black Creek seam. Houses for the miners are going up and a large tipple for hauling the product of the mines will soon be finished.

ALEXANDER CITY.

The 25,000 spindle cotton mill at Alexander City, costing a half million dollars is nearing completion, and a dozen or more cottages for operatives are finished and occupied. The machinery will be installed right away. The city in general is making great progress; a half dozen brick stores are going up, and they were rented before the ground was broken for their erection. A new foundry and machine shop is going up. The Standard Oil Company has purchased a lot and will put in large tanks, having made Alexander City a distributing point. New houses are going up in every part of the town.

TO LEASE THE SALT MINES.

Governor Jelks has determined to lease the salt lands owned by the state in Clarke county. There are about 4,000 acres of these lands, they are said to contain oil as well as salt. The land was donated to the state by the government, with the provision that they should never be sold.

Mrs. Carrie Nation turned up in St. Louis last Friday and was arrested for attempting to smash a saloon. The police captain let her off with a warning. During her visit to the lockup she declaimed against the police department for not putting down the liquor traffic.

TALLADEGA'S EXPECTATIONS.

While several railroads may run through Talladega, the East Alabama Railway which it is proposed to build to Lineville, Clay county, is the most certain. The road is the scheme of local capatalists and Swift & Co., of Chicago, the latter owning about $35,000 worth of property in Clay county. If the road is put through, the Chicago people propose to build immense fertilizer works at Talladega to utilize the product of bone and blood from their stock yards in Chicago and the output of their mines in Clay county.

KILLED BY A TRAIN.

Lon Moody, 14 years old, was killed and terribly mutilated Friday afternoon by a train at Gadsden. A freight train which was backing up knocked him down and ran over him, cutting his body half in two.

Last Tuesday afternoon Willie McCormack fell from a tree in Tuscaloosa and sustained injuries to his head from which he died Friday.

GEORGIA STORM.

A terrific hailstorm and cloudburst passed over a portion of Quitman county, Georgia, Saturday noon. The storm covered an area of four miles and swept the farms in its path. Crops, mill dams and movable objects were washed away, fences demolished and lowlands submerged. Farmers will be forced to plant over or relinquish their crops.

TO SETTLE THE MATTER.

Litigation to establish a precedent was begun July 5th. The Dayton, O., Manufacturing Co., which suffered a strike with metal polishers, brought suit for $25,000 against the polishers as a local organization and as individuals. The purpose is to establish personal liability in strike troubles, where damages ensue to the manufacturer.

HOME AGAIN.

The Alabama Press Association excursion has returned from California. Over six thousand miles were traveled and not an accident occurred or a case of sickness. Eighteen cities were visited. The association presented Secretary Rountree a handsome diamond stud while the party was on the battleship Oregon.

Capt. Richmond P. Hobson delivered an oration of an historic nature in Boston on the Fourth, touching upon the early development of the country under the guiding hands of the forefathers, and finally the contest with Spain. He touched on economics and defended the South on the slavery question.

Senor Don Rafael Salvidar, the Salvadorian minister to Washington, has left for his home. His health has suffered somewhat and he goes to recuperate.

The proclamation opening the Kiowa and Comanche Indian reservations to settlement has been prepared. The opening will be not later than August 6.

Major C. H. Albes, one of the most prominent North Alabama citizens, died at his home in Decatur Sunday. He was the proprietor of the Bismarck hotel and had been a newspaper editor in Nashville.

METAL WORKERS MEET.

The various lodges of the Amalgamation of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers located in the Birmingham district held a meeting last Sunday afternoon and endorsed the action of President Shaffer in calling the strike in the Pennsylvania and Ohio districts. The meeting was called for the purpose of hearing the reports of the conferees who attended the conferences at Pittsburg and Cleveland. A voluntary assessment to aid the fund of the strikers was levied, and it is believed that $7,000 will be raised from this state.

K. OF P. MEMORIAL EXERCISES.

The supreme law in Pythianism requires that one day in each year shall be set apart as a Memorial Day and authorizes and requests all bodies of the order to meet on that day and engage in such services and exercises as may be appropriate to the occasion. The annual memorial exercises of the Birmingham Knights of Pythias were held in the Central Presbyterian Church July 7th. The local lodges attended in a body, and the church was filled with friends of the various members. The principal feature of the exercises was the address of Mr. Lomax.

ACCIDENTALLY KILLED.

P. A. Dunn, tax collector of Autauga county, accidentally shot himself in the head Saturday morning while cleaning a pistol. He died in a couple of hours. He leaves a wife and several children in comfortable circumstances.

State Superintendent of Education Abercrombie has appointed Prof. H. H. Balch, of Madison county, one of the two teachers from this state to teach in the Philippines. He will sail from San Francisco for Manilla on July 23d.

THE VALUE OF A WIFE (?).

The city of Tuscaloosa has paid J. W. Miller $2,500 as damages for the death of his wife, who on a dark night, fell into an abyss that had been left unprotected by the city.

Barnum & Bailey's big circus was wrecked Saturday in Austria. One person was killed, several injured and the effects badly damaged.

The Empress's Sables.

The Empress Dowager of Russia is said to be the owner of the finest collection of Russian sables in the world. One of her cloaks has a lining worth $50,000, and was made of skins gathered by the governor of a polar province where taxes are paid in furs.

The Boa of Summer.

Every other well dressed woman sports a boa of pale gray ostrich feathers these balmy days, but almost as pretty and soft and more becoming to some wearers is the boa of cream white faille, bordered by a ruching of black silk loops, and strands of silk cord and jet falling in front in a sort of airy lattice work.

The Uses of Taffeta.

Black taffeta silk, flounced, corded, hemstitched, tucked or plaited, is worn by most well dressed women in every possible style and conformation. The fancy taffeta waists are perhaps the most popular garments made from this fabric. These are shown in an extensive variety of designs ranging in price from the cheapest to most expensive creations. Taffeta skirts are worn with these separate waists. They are tucked or flounced and made quite long, producing a decidedly stylish appearance. One model has three narrow circular flounces trimmed with black velvet ribbon, which is very rich. Then there are the fancy boleros made to match the skirt and worn over a blouse of contrasting color.

A Notable Scotch Woman.

Lady Grizelle Cochrane, a notable society beauty, is the daughter of a wealthy Scotch peer, and among her intimate friends she is called Annie Laurie. This is because of her striking resemblance to the beauty immortalized in the old love song, a resemblance that cannot only be traced through the words of Douglas of Fingland's famous verses, but also by the portrayal of the fair Annie that hangs in Maxwelton house. It is said, further, by those who find the likeness most convincing that Lady Grizelle's family is also connected with the Fergerson house, into which Annie was married, and thus the striking likeness is accounted for by inheritance. With her long white throat, masses of dusky brown hair, radiant complexion, hazel eyes and exquisite slender figure this charming young woman has easily inspired the modern Scotch poets with a theme for verses, and the poems that have been written in her honor and the songs that have been sung in her name have already made her almost as well known as the true Annie Laurie. Like the Duchess of Montrose and Sutherland, the Lady Grizelle is a very patriotic Scotch woman. She wears none but the simple wild flowers of her native moors and fields, and she can speak the broadest and, to American ears, the most incomprehensible Scotch brogue, or if she likes pure Gaelic to the Highlanders, and it is said further that she is one of the few women of the north country who can play the pipes as well as any man. It is being whispered about that the fair Lady Grizelle is being wooed by a stalwart Yankee, and hence another earls daughter may follow the example of Lady Sybil Cuffe, daughter of Lord Harewood, who recently married Mr. Cutting of New York City.

Minor Things That Count.

A pair of run down heels, rubbed boot toes or shoestrings that have been broken and tied again and again give a rather correct hint of the wearer's title to self respect.

The heels may be straightened for a few pennies, the strings cost a dime and shoe polish is not costly. To be neat is more admirable than to be handsome and slovenly.

Soiled white stocks, ebonized gloves, white belts, finger marked white evening bodies, are made as good as new by a thorough sponging or dipped into clear gasoline.

To reek of perfume is vulgar. Perspiration is not hidden, but intensified by trying to disguise it with heavy odors. Women will be blessed in knowing that common baking soda will entirely remove the odor of perspiration; therefore, wash your dress shields every week.

A suggestion of some delicate odor is exquisitely feminine. Let it be but a suggestion. Bernhardt, and most French women, put just a drop upon their ear tips. The Russian grande dame scents her hair. Too many American women douse perfume all over them.

Veils should be rolled upon a veil pad. A shabby, torn veil is a forlorn thing and will make even a beauty look a guy. After 40 white veils are ridiculous; before 20 black ones are correspondingly so. A veil, like gloves, should be above criticism.

Tawdry flowers, worn by no matter whom, give the wearer a theatrical commonplace appearance. With a tailor made gown gay flowers or nodding plumes are in bad taste. A beautifully tied bow of heavy silk or panne velvet upon a straw hat is more chic, keeps its style and can be cleaned.

Chatelaines, gorgeous lorgnette chains, diamonds and jeweled barettes are worn while shopping, but never by women of great social distinction, who would as soon wear a bicycle costume to church. 'Tis the little things that show whether or not the woman is a gentlewoman.—Philadelphia Record.

Queen Made Black Chic.

Three grand dames have furnished the cue a la mode for the last half century, or since 1860. Queen Alexandra, Mme. de Metternich and Sarah Bernhardt are the trio. The queen is a positive beauty, but the other two are possessed only of negative good looks. In fact Mme. de Metternich, whose influence upon the fashions has been perhaps the strongest, is positively homely, few women being more so; her ugliness is unique, but rendered fascinating by a certain charm of manner.

It was Queen Alexandra—then the Princess of Wales—who made black very chic; before her time it was dedicated to the bourgeoise. The wearing of this dismal hue belongs only to modern times; who ever heard of a Greek, or an Oriental, or an Egyptian in black. The only woman who can wear black to advantage is the one who has black eyes, black hair and is fat, is the dictum of the disciples of Edmund Russell.

The young Queen of Holland is making white the fashionable color for gowns throughout aristocratic circles in Holland. She has always preferred white, and her trousseaus contain white dresses of every kind of material—silk, velvet, wool—both for morning and evening wear. On the morning of her marriage Queen Wilhelmina appeared at breakfast with her mother in a lovely gown of white cloth, embroidered in white wool. Her wedding gown was cloth of silver and very magnificent was the white velvet dress she wore when making her public entry into Amsterdam. It was trimmed with sable, with an ermine mantle.

Because she embroideed a tunic so beautifully for the viceroy, the present Dowager Empress of China was allowed to learn to read. She was a slave and 12 years old, when she executed this really wonderful piece of work, and when asked to name her reward she said there was nothing which would suit her better than to learn to read.

There is no such thing as low neck and short sleeves in China. When western women visit China two features of their dress are a great shock to the Oriental woman—the decollette of the evening bodice, and the fact that no trousers are worn. If bloomers or knickerbockers were worn, covering the leg to the ankle Chinese women would regard them a vast improvement on the present style of western dress.

Such a hue and cry is raised about the extravagance of women of the present day, but it is nothing compared to that of centuries ago. Marie de Medici had a gown embroidered with 32,000 pearls and 300 diamonds, and Mme. de Montespan wore at a court festival "a gown of gold on gold, and over that gold frieze stitched with a certain gold which makes the most divine stuff that has ever been imagined."

Even in ancient times extravagance in dress was not uncommon. Sarah, pieces of silver for a veil—to be sure, the silver was a gift, and for that purpose, that she might buy a covering suitable to a person of her rank. Sarah doubtless wore this valuable gift as a symbol of modesty. Hermione, daughter of Helen, when she learned that her mother had been carried off by Paris, tore in pieces her veil that was interwoven with gold. All Grecian ladies wore muslin veils interwoven with gold thread, while servants were not allowed anything but plain ones. In Lacedemonia married women only are allowed the privilege of wearing veils. Young women ought to show themselves, said Charcian, in order that they might get husbands, and the married women should go veiled, to keep theirs.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Sleeves continue to be elaborate.

Linen gowns will be much in evidence this summer.

The newest ferrets are of iron. Oxydized silver is also used for these fanciful ornaments.

Raised ribbon floral embroidery on chiffon or lace ground is a London fancy, also ribbon embroidery on net.

Rope braid is used to a considerable extent for millinery purposes and appears in the form of bows, with many loops, on lace, chiffon, net and tulle toques.

White English serge gowns, lined with white taffeta and strapped with soft, lusterless white cloth resembling suede kid, are expected to be much worn this summer.

For outdoor wear shoes of gray or white chamois will continue to be fashionable. The new models show large, square bows, held in place by buckles just below the instep, over which rises a shaped flap or tongue.

A stylish black taffeta gown, with the regulation flare to the skirt, has at intervals running the full length of it box plaits of cloth. The Eton jacket of silk is finished in the same way. The result is particularly stylish and pretty.

Many of the prettiest new summer waists are made with elbow sleeves and finished with a twist and little bow of velvet or taffeta. When the waist is trimmed with bands of lace insertion, velvet ribbon is run through the lace with pretty effect.

Very chic is an ecru straw hat, the brim turned up, continental fashion. A black velvet ribbon bow is tied around the crown. At the left side stands a big pink rose, its leaves trailing over the brim onto the hair, where they join a soft rosette of liberty satin in a delicate turquoise.

FARM AND GARDEN.

The Windmill on the Farm.

The windmill has become a necessity on farms. In proportion to cost it gives more power and service than any machine or implement on a farm. Not only will a windmill pump water, but will also grind the grain, saw wood, cut the coarse food and furnish power for many other purposes. They have been greatly improved, and are capable of doing much more than many suppose.

Developing a High-Class Breed.

The characteristics of a breed can be fixed only by careful selection of the best specimens year after year, inbreeding being resorted to by breeders in order to avoid out-crosses. It may require half a century to bring a breed to the desired position sought, hence those who cross two different breeds are liable to destroy the good qualities of both.

Ventilating the Cow Stable.

The cow stable attached to the farm barn owned by G. W. Emery may be ventilated with a trap door over the feeding alley or manger, or, better yet, by a chute running from the ceiling through the roof, as indicated in the accompanying illustration.

This chute must be closed at the lower end with a slide, so that the circulation can be controlled. Fresh air may be admitted through the opening in the rear at a, care being used to place the opening so as to prevent direct drafts upon the animals. If the cows face the feeding alley running along the side next the main barn, a good place for the introduction of fresh air would be at the end of the alley, say at b. During very cold weather these openings may be closed entirely. In ventilating through chutes one should be placed every twenty-five feet throughout the length of the barn.—American Agriculturist.

Raising Irish Potatoes.

Success in growing Irish potatoes depends on two things chiefly. One is deep plowing and thorough pulverization of the soil before planting and the other is early cultivation. Other things being equal, potatoes that are planted in deeply stirred, thoroughly pulverized soil will produce a third more potatoes during a dry season than if planted in comparatively shallow ground. Deep plowing is best for a rainy season, too, as the surplus moisture passes down more readily, and the top soil may then be cultivated oftener than if plowed light originally. In fact, in growing this crop deep plowing is very essential to success. It is much easier to dig or plow out the potatoes, too, when the soil has been deeply and thoroughly stirred during cultivation.

That in favor of early cultivation is also important. Just as soon as the sprouts break the soil the cultivator should be applied and used often until the vine is in bloom. In laying the crop by a heavy double ridge should be thrown to the row. This is another feature of importance should the weather turn out dry during the latter part of the season, which is so often the case. With the seed deeply planted in loose soil, the rows thoroughly clean and well ridged up at blooming time a good crop may be said to be assured, no matter what kind of weather may come later.—H. B. Geer, in The Epitomist.

Corn Culture on Hill Farms.

A thorough preparation of the land for corn is of greatest importance; where this is done the after-work of cultivation will be comparatively easy, and with proper implements can be easily and quickly done. Corn should be planted with a machine, as in this way the hills are placed a little below the surface of the field, which will allow of the smoothing harrow, or better still, the weeder being used without injury to the young plants.

For best work the field should be clear of stones or other obstructions, and cultivation should be begun early, no matter if before the corn is above ground. The object should be to keep the surface soil fine and mellow to a slight depth and destroy all germinating weed seeds or vegetation.

Where the weeder is used the work to be effective must be begun before grass or weeds get a start, or the ground becomes packed or hard, or it will be of little effect. It should be used at least once a week until the corn gets too high for the purpose, when the cultivator may take its place. With the weeder an acre an hour can be gone over; it will require about twice as long with the cultivator.

After the corn gets well started I use a two-horse, spring tooth, riding machine. This goes astride the rows, cultivating on both sides at once, and doing the work most thoroughly and well. With improved implements a much more thorough and effective cultivation can be performed with the same amount of time and labor, compared with older methods. But they should be used more often, keeping the soil well stirred and mellow, the weeds in subjection, thus giving the crop a much better chance to appropriate the fertilizing elements both from the soil and air.—H. B. Towle, in Farm and Home.

Increasing Soil Fertility.

Any system of farming within its consideration the elements of soil, its improvement, proper disposal of crops. The feeding of crops is generally to be considered of paramount importance, their disposal only less so. The crops, with perhaps the exception of wheat, upon the farm, is to the soil fertility in the quickest way providing, of course, the feeding is properly done. To begin with, farming is complete without its horses. A farm of forty acres two horses are sufficient. A sixty acre farm three, and so on for every twenty acres up to ten, after which a horse for each additional twenty would be sufficient. I am speaking of work horses that are needed for plowing, sowing, reaping and hauling on the farm. Should one raise young horses for market they would take the place of some other crop.

Cattle and hogs are and should be the main dependence for every average farm. Cattle should have a place in that they are so valuable in the profitable raising of hogs. The pigs have a part in the rapid growth is fast and they are insured. Cows are the greatest makers of rough provender into something what would otherwise be a loss into a gilt-edged article. The work of the dairyman is a farm increasing in value and fertility is a general thing the dairyman more than he produces on it, thus bringing in fertility from where. The average farmer should keep more cattle, and there should be a preponderance of milk cows. Every good cow there should be a brood sow, for in the economy of farm these two animals go together, the hog supplementing the cow. The idea is to take everything in a condensed form, leaving all to increase soil fertility.—A. F. Miller, in The Epitomist.

Grafting the Peach.

The peach is difficult to graft in the usual way, by cleft grafting, but it may be done, for we succeeded once, but only that one time, and it was uncertain—or, rather, we failed—we gave it up. Our failure to do it right way was a kind of accident, but it is necessary to be detailed here.

The mode is what has been called side grafting, and is illustrated by the cut herewith. It is applicable to trees from half an inch to an inch in diameter. The stock is cut three or four inches above the point at which the graft is to be inserted, and generally a short distance above the surface of the ground. As in cleft grafting, then made in the side of the stock, the point decided on with a knife, which entering the stock is forced obliquely downward to the centre and nearly or quite the centre. This incision may be made as long as desired.

The scion is now to be prepared by shaving down an inch or more of the lower end into the ordinary wedge form, and it is then inserted in the oblique cut made by the knife on the side of the stock. This is done with difficulty by using the knife in the portion of the stock above the incision as a lever to hold the incision open while the scion is put in place. Great care must be taken to bring the bark of the scion in close contact with the inner bark of the stock, as in ordinary grafting. And in order that the scion may be held in place without the tie of some kind should be used, this before waxing, which is done in the usual way. But a stock three-fourths of an inch in diameter will hold the scion firmly without tying.

During the summer the scion is growing thriftily the stock is cut off smoothly with a sloping cut on the side opposite the scion, but a stub is cut off in case the graft should fail. Previously this stub is looked after and cut off in due time to prevent it from robbing the graft by the growth.

We have used this method on branches as well as on trees, and very rarely had a failure. A branch half an inch or more and which had a bud of a variety—a dormant bud, put in the previous fall—was inserted below the bud. This was done and wishing to save the life of the part of the branch above on it was cut wedge shaped and inserted in another limb of the side grafting, and it was a success, the bud growing and a good branch on the tree.

This side grafting is adapted to the other fruit trees, as the cherry, etc., as well as the peach. On one occasion a graft was put on the top of a cherry tree on a limb three inches in diameter, and the incision had to be made with the mallet and chisel, and the scion prepared first of all, so as to put in place the moment the chisel was withdrawn and before the wedge could close, as there was not sufficient age to hold it open, with the stock, unless a stub of two or three inches had been left.—Ed. Norman.

[illegible]TER-COLLECTING MOTOR CARS.

[illegible] Into the Future Which May Be Realized.

[illegible] the postal service the government annually appropriates $510,000 for horse hire and by horse hire is it meant that the department allows carriers $300 a year each for what is called mounted carrier service," said a postal official to a Star reporter this morning.

There are 29 mounted carriers in Washington and they may be observed riding around the streets in their little wagons collecting mail. Whether this is a satisfactory way of solving the problem is a matter of opinion. It has evidently been found to be the most economical a system as could be adopted for the money, and on the score of economy it may be indorsed. For other reasons, however, it cannot be commended, and it is antiquated and scarcely befitting the great system it represents.

It would probably cost twice the amount to maintain a uniform system of carriage and horse service in the cities where mounted carriers are employed, but if it cost $2,000,000 the most high standard of the administration of postal affairs would be materially increased as to appearance and undoubtedly as to service performed by these carriers. The little wagons are of better appearance than those in use some years ago, but out of a sum of only $300 a year a carrier cannot be expected to supply much of a rig for a vehicle and horse.

The idea of collecting mail on foot belongs to a past generation. It must be collected now by men in vehicles to meet the demands of the times. A vehicle hence it will be collected in all weather by men in automobiles. The system is so extensive and the offers of a deficit so ever present in the minds of the officials in all branches of the service, that reforms or measures affecting thousands of men and involving the expenditure of millions of dollars are necessarily considered and experimented with before adoption.

Nevertheless, deficit and economy to the contrary notwithstanding, the day is rapidly approaching when Washington will see the last of the jaunting cars with their little men driven by the men in gray, going from hotel to hotel, postbox to postbox in the street and hasten the time. In their stead will be automobiles, or some form of artificially propelled carriage, which will skim over the smooth streets, especially adapted to this kind of vehicle, and the mail will be collected and deposited in the offices in half the time at present required. The change will be decided, a radical one, decidedly welcome, but it will probably not be realized in the very near future unless the price of these vehicles is materially lower.—Washington Star.

The Windsor Dwelling Rooms.

It is a popular error to suppose that the dwelling rooms at Windsor are sumptuous. The private apartments are scarcely worthy of an ordinary country gentleman's seat. Queen Elizabeth is responsible for a number of them, and they were built rather hurriedly by her orders. She had taken refuge at Windsor from a plague which was raging in London, and her maids of honor and attendants revolted at the uncomfortable condition of their rooms, which were low, dark and cold. The Queen herself was furious because her dinner was invariably served up stone cold. In the course of an inquiring mind she discovered that the kitchen was nearly a mile from the dining room, and straightway built the present kitchen, which is very large and commodious. She also built the Octagon library, which is still said to haunt, and she was frequently seen, it is last year.—London Chronicle.

Insurance Against Living Burial.

Almost every day insurance genius evolves a new kind of personal or real estate security. The latest is against being buried alive. A New York man is agitating the new policy. He recently said, at an underwriters' meeting: "Insurance against being buried alive would certainly be hugely profitable. It is surprising how many people have a dread that suspended animation may be mistaken for death. I know a woman who has actually made her husband promise that if he survives her he will stick a hatpin through her heart before she is buried, to make sure that no spark of life remains. In certain parts of Europe they have what are known as mortuary houses, where the dead are taken and subjected to various tests to make sure that death is absolutely certain. I believe there is a bill providing for a somewhat similar course now before the Massachusetts legislature. If such a mortuary building is established, multitudes of people would gladly pay, say, $100 to be insured in a company that would guarantee to make the necessary tests before burial or cremation."

Publicly Flogged.

For the first time in twenty years a thief was publicly flogged at the whipping post in New Jersey the other day. The culprit was a white man named James Fisher, and he was accused of stealing a diamond pin. Nearly all of the city officials of Dover were present, when the punishment was dealt out. Many ladies of the town occupied box seats as the lash whizzed through the air and fell upon the white skin with a dull sound as though striking putty; others pressed in against the fence surrounding the post and expressed their approbation in various ways. After the punishment was over and the shackles loosened an overcoat was thrown over the man's bleeding back and he was taken back to the jail where ointment was applied.

A Unique Wisconsin Bill.

Several unique bills were introduced in the Wisconsin Legislature recently. The queerest was that fathered by Mr. Young of Eau Claire, which provides that after January 1, 1904, railway companies shall equip their trains with "devices that will keep them on the track after derailment."

The Japs Have Great Endurance.

The Japanese are a Spartan race. Many things besides their resistance to cold prove it. The most of them live in simplicity. They can go a long time without food. The coolies perform marvelous feats of strength and endurance; they draw a "jinrikisha" all day or carry travelers over the steepest mountains. Every summer a colony of foreigners go to Mt. Hei-eizan near Kioto. Their camp is several miles up the steep mountain side, but early each morning the Japanese bring up the mail, fresh vegetables and milk, and women often carry trunks to the summit on their heads. In the upper classes the old "samurai" ideals inculcated endurance, courage and simplicity.

Some Queer Names.

The North Carolina Supreme court has settled the Snow will case in accordance with the cold facts. The testator was Ice Snow of Surrey, and two of the parties in interest were Hail Snow and Rain Snod. North Carolina seems to abound in odd names, for a newspaper chronicler of the court's decision mentions as instances of this peculiarity Dr. Wisconsin Illino's Royster and Early Dawn of Raleigh, Sharp Blunt of Newborne, Sink Quick of Richmond county and Prof. Dred Peacock of Greenboro.

Not In Demand.

Evidently the Milwaukee folk who have died since the organization of the Uniformed Pallbearers' Association a month or two since, have had plenty of relatives and sorrowing friends to carry them to their last resting places, for up to date the uniformed pallbearers have not received any orders that have caused them to don their knee breeches and all the rest of it, and sally forth to head a funeral.

In Memoriam.

On the 27th day of June, 1901, Mr Augustus Jones died in peace at his home in Chilton county, where for over three quarters of a century he had lived a long life of activity, and asass went to sleep and eternal rest, surrounded by his children, grandchildren and neighbors, who lamented a good man going away never to return. This aged man, full of ripened virtues with a memory stored with good deeds, had prepared for a voyage to another sphere, where he would find at last a heaven of joy. From the eyes of those who stood by his bed long, unused to weeping, there was a rain of tears.

He went away Thursday morning at 6 o'clock. At his beside stood Elem Jones and wife, Jack Sellers and wife, Mrs. Jack Vines and Mrs. W. Hodnut, and last but not least, his aged companion, feeling the sweet assurance that he had gone home to a mansion not built with hands. Thus in the sweet by and by she too would join the dear husband and children gone before in the land far a way and be with the bright and the fair. On Friday the remains were interred in the Mullins and Jones cemetery; the funeral services were held by Rev. I. O. Rutherford. He in his early life choosing the first companion he cared for, rendered both the tender services of a mother and the stern duties of a father. This good man, in early days, without facilities, spun and wove the cloth that kept from winter's cold the helpless child. This was Christian virtue out of which God will bloom for him a fabric of eternal joy. "It would be well for us all if we could go as he went with unshaken trust in Him who had been his guide for over 86 years. Death for him had no terror and his only regret was that he left behind those who looked to him for kindly care. Blessed be the God that giveth victory over death and the grave. Blessed are they which die in the Lord. May the loved ones of the deceased realize that although they have lost their earthly father they have a Heavenly Father who is always willing to render every loving kindness upon those who do His bidding.

All Day Singing at Corinth.

Early in the morning the people began to come, and by noon there was a large crowd.

The singers came together and elected T. L. Robinson, chairman, and J. E. Goss, secretary. Arranging committee: P. M. Jones, Sam Yates and W. B. Jones. Prayer by E. L. Jones. N. J. Jones and J. M Curlee were leaders for the morning, after which they had recess for dinner. A bountiful supply of everything good was spread. In the afternoon T. M. Pyron, J. S. Jones, Jr., and T. L. Robinson, conducted the singing. As singing was not considered a proper celebration of the Fourth of July, it did not amount to much. Everyone was in for a good time and I think they were fully satisfied. Ice cold lemonade, soda water, ice cream and candy fit for a queen. Everyone went away feeling sure they did not regret being at Corinth another Fourth of July. Instead of an up-to-date all day singing, it proved to be a regular holiday picnic. So much for the Fourth.

MR. REYNOLDS' SPEECH.

I dislike to take up the time of the Convention in discussing this question, but I feel that I would be untrue to the people I represent did I not say a few words on this subject. This is a remarkable proposition and something new in the history of the country, that property, and not men, should vote.

I take this view of the question that the Convention should not, and ought not, to put anything in the Constitution that is not needed, that is not right and just and demanded by the people.

Mr. President, we have lowered the tax limit with the idea that we would give to the people of the State the right of local self-taxation for public schools. I submit that there is no one on the floor can gainsay that. We have reduced our tax rate, guaranteeing that they would give to the people locally the right to levy the amount that the tax was reduced. But this provision is so worded that it is inoperative, and the people cannot enforce it. I lay down the broad proposition that there is not a county in Alabama that can levy a school tax under this provision. If this proposition is right and just, why not put it so the people can enforce it? I say, if it is wrong, this Convention should not be put in our organic law; if it is right, it should be put in a shape that it can be enforced.

Who pays the taxes in the country? Go down these streets and you find tenants in houses paying rent. They are the ones who pay the taxes. The man who owns the property figures the taxes and includes it in the amount for which he rents. And will we say that the man who is poor shall not vote? I believe levying taxes upon property for the benefit of education is for the benefit of the property itself. I represent the hill billies—but I believe that has been ruled out—so I represent a poor agricultural people. In my county we have this law. It is inoperative because the officers don't put it into operation. In my county, in the remote country districts, wherever we have good school houses and good schools, valuations are higher than in districts where we have no school houses and churches. Then to levy school taxes and build up common schools in the country, increases the value of the property, and why not let the property bear its share of taxation to build up the schools? You educate people in the country and you elevate them and make them ride more on the railroads and the railroads ought to be made to pay their share of taxation, because they get the benefit when you elevate the people. This Convention ought to be the last body of men who would for a moment consider any proposition to tear down the school houses of the State. Why, Because we have before us now a problem as to what to do with the ignorant white man in Alabama. That is a great problem before the Convention. And should we put down in the organic law of the State for all time to come such a proposition as is embodied in this section? This ought to be the last body of men in the world to strike down the common schools of the country when it is said in the future only the educated can be allowed to vote. So I ask the delegates to pause and consider the great undertaking upon which they are entering before they put this proposition into the organic law for all time.

Who have fought the great battles of the country? When our country calls for warriors, men to go out and fight the battles, does she call for the property owners of the country? No, they are the biggest cowards that ever lived in the country. Wealth is always cowardly, and the poor people are those who fight the battles.

Now I want to say to this Convention that I never cast my vote for any special privilege for benefits of education to any class of people or against any class. I do not believe because men are rich or because corporations are wealthy that they ought to be oppressed by law. I believe the laws on the statute books should bear equally on all classes alike. I do not believe in any special laws or special licenses or license taxes that are now on our books. Always in the Legislature I have voted against them. Some gentlemen I believe referring to the assessed poll people would not have much to pay of it, that it would all fall on the rich people and possibly so heavily that they could not pay it. That would not be right. It is the duty of the Convention not to allow anything become part of our law that permits one class to bear heavily on another class. I think the laws should be made just and equitable and nothing that operates harshly on any portion of our citizenship should be tolerated.

If this measure is just, Mr. President, let us put it on the statute books, but if it is not just that the people of Alabama should rule upon this question let that be the provision.

Where is the man who went before the people of Alabama and advocated such a thing as this? Some of the most fluent speakers of this State made speeches in my county and territory, and they said there will be no white man disfranchised, not a single individual. They promised my people if a white man was disfranchised against his plea on account of poverty they would come back and make speeches against ratification of the Constitution, and if you put a provision that is reported by the Committee into this instrument I serve notice now that we will call those gentlemen to their promises and demand that they come back to my county and oppose the adoption of this Constitution. This is the most important matter that will come before the Convention since it has been in session. Yesterday we were on another important matter, and I cast my vote against the education of the tax rate. I believe that the Legislature has appropriated a great deal of money that should not have appropriated. I was afraid if you lowered the tax limit the next thing would be a blow at the common schools, and I cast that ballot against my judgment. I thought a majority of my people would do, but I believe I did right in believing. I was doing my duty towards the poor boys and girls of Alabama. I will not say hard-hearted boys, because I believe another member has copyrighted that. I hope the amendment of the delegate from Jefferson will pass. I am opposed to the substitute of the gentleman from Lowndes. I believe in a majority rule. I believe when one man goes up to the polls and casts his ballot that ballot should count as much as the ballot of any other man. I do not believe that men should be measured by their wealth. We will drift into that sooner or later, but let us not hurry into it. I do not think the people of Alabama are ready for this system and I think they will rise up and repudiate it.

PERPETUAL MOTION.

Six Thousand Miles in Fifteen Days

[illegible]

Near to Del Monte is Monterey, the oldest capital of California. We left Del Monte early on Sunday morning, our next stopping place being Paso Robles, a picturesque little town possessing a hot spring, the qualities of which I did not ascertain. About 11 o'clock we arrived at San Luis Obispo, where for a couple of hours we explored the town and the Old Mission house. Thence on to Santa Barbara, a pretty town all buried with bloom. Again we go on, passing through Los Angeles to Santa Monica arriving at the latter place about midnight. Early in the morning, while Mother Earth was enveloped in a mist from the sea, we were down on the sandy beach and a number of us in the ocean taking a morning dip. Santa Monica is a delightful place and we would willingly have remained longer.

At Los Angeles we were conducted to the Chamber of Commerce and shown a splendid collection of the products of the country. Then we strolled about the streets of this beautiful city, deriving pleasure from the mere fact of walking in the exhilarating atmosphere. The streets are beautifully clean and the stores attractive. In the afternoon, boarding the electric cars, we proceeded through lovely Pasadena and aristocratic Altadena on our way up in the clouds to Mt. Lowe, passing on the way the ostrich farm at South Pasadena. As we approach the mountains far away above us can be seen the track winding its tortuous way from point to point, and many are the ejaculations of wonderment as we look on earth we are going to go up there. Then we come to the Canon and alight from the car in a wild looking spot.

Right in front of us, away up the steep mountain side, far as the eye can reach, is the great cable incline, and we marvel at the difficulties which had to be overcome by the engineers in laying such a track. Seated in the car it begins to ascend, and for every one hundred feet we go forward we rise a system upward. We seem to be shooting into space, as looking backward and downward a glorious panorama is spread before us. As we rise higher and get a more extended view the towns we have just passed through, and the orange groves and fields look like a chess board. Half way up we pass an incoming car coming down with no one on board. Seven minutes takes us to the top of Echo mountain where we alight and gaze with delight across the valley far below. We are now 3500 feet above sea level and a four mile trip is still before us.

Here we enter a small trolley car and proceed on our journey, winding in and out among the mountains, ever upward and onward, at times holding our breath as we travel along the side of a precipice, the next thrilled with awe as we pass over a trestle and look down for hundreds of feet. At certain points we can at the same time see the road below over which we have just travelled and the track above us the track we have to climb. The views are grand and change every minute, each one excelling in grandeur those we have just imagined could not possibly be surpassed. And finally

PERPETUAL MOTION.

Six Thousand Miles in Fifteen Days

[illegible] Monte is Monterey, the older capital of California. We left Los Monte early on Sunday morning, our next stopping place being Piso Robles, a picturesque little town possessing a hot spring, the qualities of which I did not ascertain. About 11 a.m. we arrived at San Luis Obispo, where for a couple of hours we explored the town and the Old Mission house. Thence on to Santa Barbara, a pretty town all burdened with bloom. Again we go on, passing through Los Angeles to Santa Monica arriving at the latter place about midnight. Early in the morning, while Mother Earth was enveloped in a mist from the sea, we were down on the sandy beach and a number of us in the ocean taking a morning dip. Santa Monica is a delightful place and we would willingly have remained longer.

At Los Angeles we were conducted to the Chamber of Commerce and shown a splendid collection of the products of the country. Then we strolled about the streets of this beautiful city, deriving pleasure from the mere fact of walking in the exhilirating atmosphere. The streets are beautifully clean and the stores attractive. In the afternoon, boarding the electric cars, we proceeded through lovely Pasadena and aristocratic Altadena on our way up in the clouds to Mt. Lowe, passing on the way the ostrich farm at South Pasadena. As we approach the mountains far above us can be seen the track winding its tortuous way from point to point, and many are the ejaculations of wonderment as we look on earth we are going to go there. Then we come to Echo Canon and alight from the car in a wild looking spot.

Right in front of us, away up some mountain side, far as the eye can see, a great cable incline, and we marvel at the difficulties to be overcome in laying such a road. Soon after the car it begins to climb and every one hundred and [illegible] forward we rise [illegible]. We seem to be [illegible] looking backward and onward a glorious panorama is spread before us. As we go higher and get a more extended view the towns we have passed, and the orange groves look like a chess board. As we wind up we pass another car coming down with 10 passengers. Seven minutes takes us to the Echo mountain house where we halt and gaze with delight on the valley far below, 3,500 feet above sea level. Our trip is still [illegible].

Here we enter a small trolley car and proceed on our journey, winding in and out among the mountains, ever upward and onward, at a moment holding our breath as we travel along the side of a precipice, the next thrilled with awe as we pass over a trestle and look down as for hundreds of feet. At many points we can at the same moment see the road below over which we have just travelled and the track above us the track we have to climb. The views are grand and change every minute, each one excelling in grandeur those we have just imagined could not possibly be surpassed. And finally we reach the Alpine Tavern nestling among the trees at the head of the grand Canon, 5000 feet above sea level. A short stop is made and we walk around, then begin the descent which in some respects is more awe-inspiring than the upward journey. Night is drawing on and the ever changing aspect of the scene presents new and astonishing pictures. We reach the incline and down we go, enter the electric cars and arrive at Los Angeles at nine o'clock, having enjoyed one of the most delightful mountain trips in the world.

On Tuesday morning we bid farewell to Los Angeles, hoping in course of time to re-visit that lovely city, and after a two hours run arrive at Riverside, another beautiful city, looking as neat as a new pin. Special electric cars were in readiness and away we go through the city and for some three miles along the far-famed Magnolia Avenue. 'Twas a splendid ride, the avenue lined on each side with giant eucalyptus, and orange and lemon orchards laid out with mathematical precision. At the end of the ride we were regaled with refreshments, and crowning glory of all were turned loose in an orange grove where we plucked the golden fruit to our hearts' content. Returning to the city we dined, then on to the cars again and a short run of half an hour brings us to Redlands, our last stop in California.

Redlands presented the same attractive appearance we have noted in all California towns, and while carriages were in waiting to convey our party to Smiley Heights, we strolled around the town and into the Smiley Library and Park, where we spent a couple of hours very pleasantly. At 4 p. m. we are again on board the train with a run of 647 miles across the great desert before we make our next stop at El Paso, with the exception of short stops for meals.

Oh, the desert! It was hot, it was dusty, it was uncomfortable, it was thoroughly disagreeable. But we have not yet come to the worst of it. After seven hours run we re-cross the Colorado river at Yuma, we have left California and are again in Arizona. All through the night we are afflicted with the heat and the dust, which in spite of closed windows and doors penetrates everywhere, while the wretched taste of alkali and a consuming thirst adds to the discomfort. Morning breaks, noon comes, and still with a whirr, whirr, rattle, rattle, we pursue our way across the never changing desert. No signs of habitations, no signs of life, nought but sand, a slight scrubby growth and cactus, while in the distance the mountains stand up as bare and gaunt as the desert itself. The one redeeming feature of the desert was the mirage. Apparently we could see a large lake of beautiful clear water reflecting in its depths every variation of the mountain range; not a detail was missing, and one almost expected to see boats upon the water. As we pass along, looking backward, we can see nothing but a sandy waste, our beautiful lake has vanished, and it is hard work to convince ourselves that it was nothing but an illusion.

And so we whirl along across Arizona and New Mexico, desert, desert all the way, until the conviction is almost forced upon us that we have struck "perpetual" motion and are doomed for ever to continue rattling across a barren waste. After thirty hours run we arrive at El Paso, Texas, where if time permitted we were to have been hospitably entertained. But

I think crops are cut off at least one-half through this part of the country, but we have some prospect of rain now. We had a hot wind Friday which was almost fatal to crops and something we have never experienced before.

We are having a great deal of sickness which is not unexpected. J. P. Jones was suddenly stricken with a hot fever Friday evening, but is now improving.

M. C. Williams is also right sick. Bill McKinney's little child, who has been sick quite awhile, died last week. We sympathize with the bereaved parents.

P. M. Jones killed two turkeys one morning last week.

Mrs. Williams has moved to Wadworth's new mill.

David Kendrick visited relatives at Bethel Saturday and Sunday.

Misses, Lotta and Cora Bail, two of Clanton's charming young ladies, are visiting Mrs. Kendrick this week.

Mr. Mercer and wife, and Mr. Pilate, all of Elmore, are visiting friends here this week.

J. A Jones went to Clanton Saturday to purchase some school books.

Messrs. W. A. Goss and James T. Allen, visited Palmetta cave last week.

Had some of our young people attended service at Canaan Sunday, and report a nice time at Mr Blackman's in the afternoon. The writer happened to be among them.

Our school is progressing nicely, though we find it quite difficult to get in possession of the adopted books.

Some of our boys know what it is to fall over the fence. Take warning. SUBON.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Jones of Lomax, were the guests of Mr. Bob Hardy and family Saturday night.

Mrs. Frances Burnett left Sunday for Bessemer where she goes to visit one of her daughters.

Right and wrong.—There is not great, no small, in right and wrong. Whatever is wrong if done to a thousand men, is wrong if done to one; and whatever is wrong when coined to its ultimate end is no less wrong in its inception. There is no injustice in respecting the rights of the few, though it displeases the many; but to please the many at the expense of the few, is a great injustice to the few; and an exhibition of tyranny toward a few, rightly considered, is a menace to all. "It is better to be beaten in right than to succeed in wrong." Have principles of right by which to live, and then live by them. "Do right through the heavens fall."

THE MACEDONIA MEETING.

The meeting for the purpose of considering the formation of the Chilton County Association of Baptist churches was held at Macedonia on Saturday, July 13.

After devotional exercises for thirty minutes, organization was effected by electing Rev. S. M. Adams chairman, and John T. Martin Secetary. The names of the Baptist churches of Chilton county were called and delegates enrolled. Delegates were present from eleven churches of the Mulberry Association, ten churches from the Unity, and one from the Wenguefka. The chairman very ably and clearly explained the object of the convention.

By a vote of the convention it was agreed to vary the original program and discuss the following query:

1st. Does the cause of Christ in Chilton county demand a more perfect organization?

It was discussed for about forty minutes by J. E. Champion, F. M. Woods, S. M. Adams and E. H. Parrish.

The following motion was put before the convention:

Resolved, that it is the sense of this convention that to better perform the work which is before the Baptist of Chilton county a more perfect organization is needed. The motion was sustained without opposition. A motion to adjourn was next in order. The convention took a recess for one hour and a half.

AFTERNOON SESSION

After some discussion it was agreed for the delegates to refer this work of this convention back to their churches, and if a majority of the churches in Chilton county would ratify it, a meeting is to be held to organize a Chilton County Association. Collins Chapel was selected as the place of holding this meeting, on Wednesday 16, 1901.

Brethren S. M. Adams, F. M. Woods and E. B. Deason were appointed as an executive committee to receive communications from the various churches, after they have acted on the work of the convention.

The business of the convention being now finished the first subject of the program was discussed by Rev. F. M. Woods and others.

The convention adjourned until 9 a. m. tomorrow, when after some discussion and a speech by Rev. F. M. Woods on the work of the Holy Spirit, and a sermon at 11 o'clock by Rev. S. M. Adams the convention adjourned. It was a highly successful and sweet spirited meeting.

I have found Dr. Moffett's TEETHINA a splendid remedy and aid for my teething children. When my oldest boy was teething child, every succeeding day warned us tha we would inevitably lose him. I happened upon TEETHINA, and began at once administering it to him, and his improvement was marked in 24 hours, and from that day on he recuperated. I have constantly kept it and used it since with my children, and have taken great pleasure in sounding its praises to all mothers of young children. I found it invaluable even after the teething period was passed.

CLANTON, - - - ALABAMA.

A California community recently lynched at one seance five men accused of horse stealing. This reads like the good old dime-novel days.

A bicyclist has invented an attachment which enables him to ride along a railway at a high rate of speed. It is now to be determined whether the company has the right to a fare from him, and if so, how it is to be collected.

Efforts have been made to effect a saving in the consumption of fuel. Improved fire boxes have done good. New boilers have helped to some extent. There are a score of appliances that make a ton of coal go further today than three tons a half century ago. However, so long as more heat is wasted than utilized scientists have a work before them.

When crossing the ocean in the summer one can send messages almost as regularly to one's friends as when on land. The carrier pigeons used for the transportation very seldom go astray, sometimes flying over 300 miles. The little birds have quite a career before them, somewhat different from their peaceful brethren, whose sole interest in life seems to be to strut and coo on the barn roofs.

According to the late Sir Edward Watkin, the English railway magnate, the safest place on earth is a railway car. He once declared that he had proved to his own satisfaction that railroad traveling, according to official statistics, was safer than walking, driving, going up or down stairs or even eating. He had found, he said, that more people choked themselves while eating than were killed on railway lines.

The secretary of the Sheffield chamber of commerce, after a careful study of conditions in the United States, awards the heartiest praise to the road transportation system in America, in comparison with the achievements so far made in Great Britain. He is reported as saying that even in small towns Uncle Sam handles his highway traffic as thoroughly and well as John Bull handles his in large cities. Moreover, he frankly admits that the prinicpal steam railroads of Yankeeland are more punctual in their train service, and provide more comfort and convenience for passengers than the British roads furnish. He also commends our fast freight trains, which carry enormous loads at high speed in cars of remarkable strength and capacity, drawn by the most powerful locomotive engines in the world.

Preliminary plans for the proposed Carnegie technical school in Pittsburg have been made. They provide for six large buildings grouped around a central courtyard. The course of instruction in the school will extend through nine years. The first four years will be devoted to preparatory work, and the second four to the regular collegiate work of the engineering schools. The ninth year will be the post-graduate course, which all finished engineers desire to take before they enter practical business. The buildings were planned with the long and thorough course in view, and the idea was the result of long study of the conditions and their success in the best technical schools of the old world. Facilities are to be offered for obtaining the mastery of any chosen trade or the grouping of all for thorough training of engineering as a science. All of this is to be coupled with practice.

Italy is suffering from what criminologists called "a wave of crime" of most virulent description. The total number of persons arrested last year was nearly twice as large as in the year before, the numbers being, respectively, 530,000 and 280,000. These figures include offenses of all kinds from minor misdemeanors to murders and assassinations. The greatest increase is noted in the latter class, and the police seem unable to check them. The cause is found chiefly in the impoverished state of the country, which has given rise to much labor agitation with the accompanying strikes and violence while hunger and a general spread of neurotic ailments are mentioned as subsidiary causes. The Italian authorities, however, point out, for the benefit of foreigners, that this wave of crime is, so to say, quite local, and, therefore, we take it, tourists need have little fear of being the victims of any but the usual legitimate robberies and extortions.

THE NEWS BUDGET OF THEIR ACTIONS

Explosions Big and Little — Figures From the University — The Governor's Appointments — Another Big Fire Visits Clanton.

BOILER EXPLOSION.

A boiler explosion occurred at the mills of the Sample Lumber company at Hollins, Ala., Friday afternoon. The colored fireman of the boiler was killed, and Superintendent Laumer was seriously injured. The boiler was one of the battery and was badly damaged by the explosion. None of the other boilers were hurt, though the building was almost destroyed. The boiler which exploded was fifty horse power. The big iron monster sailed directly upward for about twenty feet and then fell exactly back in its place. A statement was made last night work would be resumed on Monday.

PANIC IN CHURCH.

Rev. John Bass Shelton, of Montgomery, closed a successful revival meeting at Montevallo Saturday night. At the service a lamp exploded and a panic and stampede followed. The crowd jammed the doors and in the excitement many women and children jumped through the open windows fifteen feet from the ground. Three persons and several others were painfully bruised. The physicians of the town were all in church and cared for the wounded.

THE BOOKS BALANCE.

The assistant examiner of public accounts has examined the Tuscaloosa University books and finds them correct. On July 13 the following credits were shown:

University fund	$ 877.87
Cadet fund	1,282.74
Land fund	199.10
Investment fund (Alabama bonds)	328.95
Bryan fund	259.00

GOVERNOR'S APPOINTMENTS.

Governor Jelks has named a state board of examiners of mine bosses as follows: A. J. Reilly, Pratt City; Priestly Toulmin, Birmingham; David Kirkwood, Oakman; Robert Neill, Dolomite; and T. Howard Embert to be commissioner of deeds for Alabama in Baltimore, M. D.

TEMPLE OF JUSTICE.

Lauderdale's new county court house is nearing completion and will be ready for occupancy about the middle of August. The county commissioners have expended $4,300 for furniture and interior improvements. The building cost about $50,000, and is one of the handsomest and commodious in the state.

ANOTHER CLANTON FIRE.

Thursday morning a disastrous fire destroyed about $15,000 worth of property at Clanton. This is the second bad fire Clanton has had in six months and was evidently the work of an incendiary. But one house and none of the goods were insured.

Former Sheriff Hamp Morris, of Blount county, died in Blountsville a few days ago at the age of 58. He was well known throughout the county, having served as sheriff from 1888 to 1892.

A HISTORIC FIND.

While exacvating for the sewers at Decatur last week the workmen found what is believed to be a relic of the revolutionary war. Buried under eight feet of earth, a saber, sti clutched by a skeleton hand, was found. Nearby a skull and several other human bones were unearthed. It is believed that the saber belonged to a revolutionary general, as some o the older citizens remember their forefathers telling of an American officer having been killed and buried near that spot. The weapon is in good preservation.

KILLED BY THE TRAIN.

Tom Henson, white, 18 years old, living near Margerum, was run over and killed by a Southern freight Saturday morning. He boarded the train at Margerum to ride home and selected to ride between the cars rather than pay his fare. Being partially intoxicated he lost his balance and fell under the train, receiving injuries which resulted in his death.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Work has commenced at Selma on the new L. & N. Railroad bridge across the Alabama river.

Work on Gadsden's new stove foundry will commence at once. The land has been bought and is situated on the Louisville & Nashville railroad.

The business men of Oneonta organized a board of trade last week. The object is to attract the attention of capitalists and to induce them to establish industries there.

The new board of trustees of Lafayette college held a meeting Tuesday afternoon, and accepted the resignation of Dr. E. R. Eldridge, president of that institution.

The Brookside high school teachers have been selected for the ensuing year. With a new school building erected at a cost of $1,485, and the new corps of teachers, the community is delighted.

The long distance telephone line which is to connect the towns of Tuscumbia, Florence and Sheffield with Russellville, is nearing completion. The line has been completed to a point five miles from Tuscumbia.

Selma has information that the army worm has made its appearance on cotton a few miles above Summerfield. Cotton is small and backward in that section, and it will be hard on the farmers if the army worm comes along and adds to the shortening of the crop.

William Stephenson, a young Dallas county farmer was arrested last Tuesday charged with shooting his brother-in-law, A. J. Haley. The shooting is said to have occurred on Haley's farm and the difficulty arose out of a dispute about work. The wounded man will likely recover.

Merdith Garner, a young white man was killed in a peculiar manner at Ward's saw mill, near Bay Minette, Thursday. Garner was handling lumber from the saw and fell backwards. His neck struck a one-inch plank edgewise, and was broken by the force of the blow. He died almost instantly.

Evan Childers, the young man who was shot by W. S. Prothero, at Sulligent last Monday, is dead. Prothero is still at large, though diligently hunted by the sheriff. Childers made a statement before he died, that there had been no serious quarrel, but that Prothero had simply called to him, and warning him to get his weapon, opened fire. Childers was unarmed at the time.

ALMOST LOST HIS HEAD.

With his head almost torn from his body Joseph Burdick still lives, furnishing one of the most remarkable cases known to physicians. Burdick's head was all but taken off by a piece of metal which fell across his neck. The trachea and larynx were completely torn away. By some fortune his neck was not broken nor were the jugular vein and carotid artery injured, though both were fully exposed. Burdick was operated upon and equipped with a device for breathing.

DROWNED.

Jim Walls, a young white man, was drowned Sunday in Skinner's pond, West Anniston, while in swimming. Other bathers failed to rescue him.

ANOTHER OIL COMPANY.

The third oil company, wi th a capital stock of $100,000, was organized at Huntsville Saturday to sink eight wells in Lincoln and Madison counties. Incorporation papers will be filed Monday. The company controls 10,000 acres of land.

NARROW ESCAPE.

Friday night frightened horses and a broken harness caused the tipping into Oxford Lake of a coaching party of nine young people. One young lady was caught and held under water by the vehicle, but the whole party escaped with a wetting and a scare.

BLAZES IN DEMOPOLIS.

Two small fires occurred in Demopolis Saturday. The ice-factory, the ginnery seed shed and Mayor Howze's kitchen suffered. Loss nominal, insurance nil.

TEMPORARILY CRAZED.

Mrs. Silas Witt, a widow living five miles south of Center, committed suicide Saturday afternoon by hanging. No cause is known for her action except temporary insanity. She was 67 years old.

An effort has been set on foot by several public-spirited Tuscaloosa citizens looking to a city hospital.

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

Further Report of Alabama's Constitutional Convention.

Fortieth Day.

Legislators' Limitations Discussed—Local Legislation Reports Are Being Considered.

There were 116 delegates present this morning and an even hundred in the afternoon. Mr. Beddow offered an ordinance to prohibit the leasing of convicts after January 1, 1904, but to work them for the benefit of the state.

The report of the committee on local legislation came up for discussion, and the first sixteen sub-divisions of the first section occupied the entire day. The section will prohibit the general assembly from passing special, private or local laws in certain cases. 35 sub-divisions compose the section. Those which caused debate were numbers 8, 9, 11, 14 and 17.

Sub-division 8 regulates the time within which civil or criminal action may begin. Number 9 denies the general assembly the power to exempt persons, corporations or sections from operation of general laws, and finally was adopted as follows: "9. Exempting any individual, private corporation or association from the operation of any general law." Number 12 refers to changing county seats, and was adopted. Number 14 was lost. It restricts granting any exclusive or special privilege, immunity or franchise whatever, and as it affected the dispensary matter in the minds of some, the measure was defeated. Number 17 sanctioning invalid instruments of law was under discussion when adjournment was ordered.

Forty-First Day.

Sections 1, 2 and 3 on Local Legislation Adopted—Suffrage Article in Regular Order.

One hundred and twenty-two delegates answered to roll call at today's morning session and 96 in the afternoon. An effort was made to take up the suffrage report on next Tuesday, the 16th inst., but it failed.

The city council of Sheffield petitioned that the debt limit of cities as proposed in the article on taxation be not adopted.

Discussion of the article on local legislation was then resumed. The section was completed and adopted and also sections 2 and 3. The general assembly, by virtue of article 1 is prohibited among other things from amending, confirming or extending the charter of any private or municipal corporation or remitting the forfeiture thereof; establishing separate school and stock districts; creating, increasing or decreasing pay of public officials, exempting from jury or road duty; donating land owned or controlled by the state to any person or corporation.

In the afternoon the committee on schedule made a partial report. The general assembly was further restricted from changing the lines of old counties and from restoring the right to vote to persons convicted of infamous crimes or involving moral turpitude.

Sections 2 and 3 of the article were then adopted. The second is supplementary to parts of section 1, and the third refers to repeals.

Forty-Second Day.

A Day of Discussion—Economy Commenced—A Suffrage Caucus Has Been Called.

The attendance of 118 this morning was augmented by one in the afternoon.

The morning session was largely consumed by an effort to reconsider the section on local legislation which provides that no local law be enacted on a subject covered by a general law. Some of the members see in it a menace to the dispensary and the Mobile and Eufaula school systems. The section was reconsidered after a heated debate between Mr. O'Neal and Mr. Smith and was readopted in the afternoon. Mr. DeGraffenried gave notice he would move its reconsideration again tomorrow.

After this week five pages and the clerks of all committees but the ones on rules and harmony will be dispensed with.

The committee on impeachments made its report. It contains four sections. A minority report signed by Messrs. Thompson and Robinson was also submitted. Notice was also given of a democratic caucus on Monday to consider the suffrage clause.

At the afternoon session there was much parliamentary discussion. Section four of the article on local legislation was taken up and was finally adopted, but not before Hon. Tom Lodg had offered an amendment prohibiting the general assembly from calling another constitutional convention. Section 5 was also considered, but adjournment was ordered before its discussion was completed.

Forty-Third Day.

Three Mills School Tax—Property Vote Killed—County Areas Are Not Reduced.

One hundred and twenty delegates were present at this morning's session of the convention and leaves of absence were granted so that only 106 were present in the afternoon.

Mr. Carmichael introduced an ordinance to provide that the general assembly could levy only 55-100 of 1 per cent for general tax levy, with an extra 21-100 for soldiers and schools or either.

The committee on education reported an article of 13 sections. It recommends a three-mill tax for schools. A minority report was also submitted. It is signed by seven members of the committee and opposes the constitutional provision that the governor be a member of the University board and recommends that the superintendent of education be ex-officio a member of the board. Sections 5, 6 and 7 of the article on local legislation were then adopted and the article sent to the engrossing committee.

In the afternoon the report of the committee on state and county boundaries was taken up. There were three minority reports and one amendment. The first section was adopted defining the boundaries of the state as in the old constitution and providing for territory which may be annexed. Sections 2 and 3 on county boundaries and areas of counties caused much discussion, and time for adjournment came before it was finished.

Forty-Fourth Day.

County Boundaries Not to Be Changed—Present Clause Stands—Stenographic Report May Stop.

Roll call showed 88 members present this morning. Mr. Samford moved that when the convention adjourned this morning that it meet at 11 o'clock Monday. This motion was adopted.

The fifty day limit of the convention session expires next Saturday, July 20th, and Mr. Davis offered a resolution to discontinue the stenographic report after that date.

The convention then took up section 3 of the article on boundaries and after much discussion readopted the clause in present constitution. Section 5 was adopted which prohibits the creation of new counties whose lines run within seven miles of the county court house of any old county.

Forty-Fifth Day.

The County Site Removal Matter Settled—Calera Knocked Out—Banking Section Adopted.

Only 87 delegates answered to their names at roll call this morning and more leaves of absence were granted. The entire morning session was spent in discussing the court-removal section (6) of the article on boundaries. Four more delegates came in after dinner and the section was adopted. It provides that no county seat shall be moved except on a majority vote at a county election. The section also kills Calera's hopes of becoming the the capital of Shelby county by decreeing that Columbiana shall remain the county seat.

The report of the committee on banks and banking was then taken up and its eight articles were adopted with certain amendments. It is practically the same article as now in force except there is to be an official to examine banks and individuals doing a banking business, trust companies and similar institutions. An amendment by Governor Oates to allow state banks to issue money was passed. Until the 10 per cent federal tax is repealed this will be in operation.

The convention will take up the report of the committee on legislative department tomorrow.

OUR LITTLE FIGHTER.

General Joseph Wheeler, marshal of the coming fete day parade at Newport, R. I., has sent to Governor Crane of Massachusetts a request that the Second and Ninth Massachusetts Regiments be sent to take part in the parade. General Wheeler is anxious for the presence of these two regiments which served with him in the Santiago campaign.

A French writer, assuming that the prosperity and power of Great Britain depend on her supply of coal, predicts that "the end" will come during the 20th century. About the year 1950, he says, the supply will be exhausted. In this prediction he assumes that mining cannot be economically carried on beyond a depth of 2000 feet. Nature, the well known English scientific paper, in answering the Frenchman's lugubrious statement says that recent investigations have shown the possibility of economical mining at much greater depths than 2000 feet, and that the British coal supply will last indefinitely longer than he claims.

ARP DISCUSSES CARE OF CONVICTS

Through Reading the Reports of Camp Officials William's Attention Is Directed to an Ever-Absorbing Problem.

Next in importance to the education of the children of the state comes the care of the convicts, the lunatics and the deaf and blind. These are charges fixed charges that rest everywhere upon the citizen and taxpayer and cannot be avoided. A careful perusal of the last reports of the officers of these institutions give us deep concern for their inmates are increasing faster than population and this increase indicates a growing degeneracy in mental, physical or moral condition of our people. These reports give much interesting matter, for there is hardly a state in the union where similar institutions are so ably and faithfully officered. We are especially fortunate in having such a capable and experienced man as Dr. Powell, at the head of our sanitarium. The apprehension is that when he dies we cannot fill his place for we cannot find a man who has both his ability and his long experience. The same can be said of Professor Connor, in charge of the school for the deaf. These two are veterans in the service and have by their long and faithful work allayed all public anxiety about those institutions.

But why should so many more children be born deaf and dumb than formerly, and why should so many more people become insane? Only a few years ago Prof. Connor reported 105 and now he has 215 in charge. Do folks keep on marrying their cousins and will the law keep on allowing it? As to the sanitarium, there seems to be no limit, no diminution of the rapid increase and as fast as more room is provided more still is wanted.

Dr. Powell reports that on October 1 1900, there were 1,700 whites and 742 colored on hand, and the new applications now average about six per day. Of course many die and it is a comfort to know that many recover their reason and are discharged. Two hundred and fifty-nine whites and ninety four negroes were discharged last year. One hundred and fifty six whites and 186 negroes died. The doctor gives pleasant and easy employment to all who can and are willing to work. He is a philosopher of my own kind, for he says he has found that work, manual labor, is more conducive to restoration and contentment than any other medicine. Gardening, sewing, washing, canning fruits, etc., is done on a large scale. Much more of this is done than formerly and the report shows an immense business. Just think of last year's work—1,000 aprons, 2,000 bedticks, 3,000 chemises, 1,800 calico dresses, 700 homespun dresses, 4,700 pair drawers, 4,500 pillow cases, 5,000 pair pants, 3,800 shirts, 2,600 undershirts and quilts by the score—crazy quilts, I suppose—making a total of over 50,000 articles made by crazy women. Good gracious! what an industrial female family the doctor has got. In this way he has greatly reduced the cost of maintenance and brought down the per capita to $117. But on the other hand, he has to be continually repairing or replacing something, for he says "insanity means destruction and that the tendency of a large number of patients is to destroy furniture, crockery, bedding, clothing, lights, sash and sometimes tearing their rooms to pieces." Now just imagine what an army of lunatics we have. Cartersville is quite a large little country town of 3,500 people, but three-fourths of them are children under age. We have only about 800 grown-up people who are ... to be lunatics, but here at the sanitarium are three times as many, and the number increasing every year.

But the report of the prison commission gives us most anxiety, for that concerns crime and involves the safety of our people from the lawless who fear not God nor regard man. The maintenance of the sanitarium costs the state $275,000 annually, but there is one good thing, and only one about the convicts. They cost the state nothing after the trial, but on the contrary they bring in considerable revenue and under the new system this revenue is rapidly increasing. Gen. Evans, Mr. Eason and Mr. Turner inaugurated this system only two years ago and it has already proved a signal success. The state now has the absolute control of all its convicts and has purchased a large farm near Milledgeville where the old men and the boys and all the women are kept. Under the skilful management of Mr. Foster the farm paid well the first year, and the convicts are nearly as happy as they were in old slavery time. Most of the able-bodied convicts are leased to farmers at good prices, but the state provides guards and medical attention.

Here is another army of 2,300 to look after, but these are not all. There are 2,350 more at work in the county chaingangs, making a total of 4,650, of whom 350 are white, ten are white women and 215 are negro women.

Of the state convicts for felony 90 are guilty of murder or manslaughter, 916 for burglary or robbery or larceny, 237 for the usual crime. The ...

Pan-American Congress—A Few Census Figures — A Possible Cabinet Change — Home From Porto Rico — Turkey Prys Up.

The census bureau has issued a bulletin concerning the urban population of the country. It shows that 28,411,698 people in the United States live in cities and towns of over 2,500 population. This is 37.3 per cent of the entire population, a gain of almost 5 per cent since the census of 1890, when the percentage was 22. The percentage of people living in cities and towns as compared with the entire population of the places ranges from 91.6 in Rhode Island to 1 in Indian Territory. Southern figures are: Florida, 16.5; Texas, 14.1; Tennessee, 14.1; Georgia, 13.9; Alabama, 10.0; North Carolina, 6.8; Arkansas, 6.9; Mississippi, 5.3.

Secretary Hay has received assurances that every government in the western hemisphere has accepted the invitation to participate in the Pan-American congress in Mexico in October, and that preparations for representation are well advanced. Four general subjects will be urged for consideration—arbitration; international court of claims; protection of industry, agriculture and commerce, means of international communication, consular, port and customs regulations, statistics; reorganization of the international bureau of American republics.

United States Minister Leishman at Constantinople has received a draft for $95,000 in settlement of American claims. Among those is that of Lentz, who was killed in Asia Minor while making a tour of the world wheel for a popular magazine. The sum paid by the Turkish government does not represent to total of American claims, but has been accepted by the United States as a satisfactory.

It is stated that Frank W. Hackett will tender his resignation as assistant secretary. He will inspect navy yards and naval organizations before returning to Washington next month to act as secretary in the absence of Secretary Long of the navy. The administration has not determined upon his successor. Charles H. Allen, governor of Porto Rico, has been suggested.

A recent order from the war department provides for increase of artillery as fast as enlistments are completed. The new order adds one-sixth, amounting to about [illegible] men. As the increases are made the number of enlisted men there will be an increase in the number of officers, which results in promotion of many officers now in the service.

It is announced that a discriminating duty will be imposed to counteract the retaliatory duty upon certain American products which has been shown by the Russian government. It is not the volume of Russian sugars imported into the United States which determines the anxiety of Russia, but rather its policy of retaliation where nothing is to be gained.

An appointment of interest to Bahamians is that of Miss Lily Warwick, formerly of Huntsville, to a place as teacher in the Philippine Islands. Miss Warwick is well known here, sister of Capt. O. B. Warwick, who a year ago while leading his company of the Eighteenth Infantry in the Filipino insurgents.

Governor Allen and wife, of Porto Rico, with their household, sailed for New York Saturday on the Mayflower. A large crowd assembled at the wharf to bid the party farewell. He admitted no intention of returning to Porto Rico. It is semi-officially announced that he will enter the diplomatic service.

Representative Bankhead, who has been with the rivers and harbors committee in the West, says the committee is working on the general rivers and harbors bill, and hopes to pass it in congress before the holiday recess.

Hon. Richard B. Hubbard, formerly governor of Texas, and later President Cleveland's minister to Japan, United States Minister to Japan, died at his home in Tyler, Tex., Sunday.

ARLY DISCUSSES CARE OF CONVICTS

Through Reading the Reports of Camp Officials William's Attention Is Directed to an Ever-Absorbing Problem.

Next in importance to the education of the children of the state comes the care of the convicts, the lunatics and the deaf and blind. Now just imagine what an army of lunatics we have. Cartersville is quite a large little country town of 3,500 people, but three-fourths of them are children under age. We have only about 800 grown up people who are fit to be lunatics, but here at the sanitarium are three times as many, and the number increasing every year.

But the report of the prison commission gives us most anxiety, for that concerns crime and involves the safety of our people from the lawless who fear not God nor regard man. The maintenance of the sanitarium costs the state $[illegible] annually, but there is one good thing, and only one about the convicts. They cost the state nothing after the trial, but on the contrary they bring in considerable revenue, and under the new system this revenue is rapidly increasing. Gen. Evans, Mr. Eason and Mr. Turner inaugurated this system only two years ago and it has already proved a signal success. The state now has the absolute control of about [illegible] convicts and has purchased a large farm near Milledgeville, where the old men and the boys and all the women are kept. Under the skillful management of Mr. Foster the farm paid well the first year, and the convicts are nearly as happy as they were in old slavery time. Most of the able-bodied convicts are leased to farmers at good prices, but the state provides guards and medical attention.

Here is another army of 2,300 to look after, but these are not all. There are 2,350 more at work in the county chaingangs, making a total of 4,650, of whom 358 are white, ten are white women and 215 are negro women.

Of the state convicts for felony 907 are guilty of murder or manslaughter, 358 for burglary or robbery or larceny, 197 for the usual crime. The rest are for most any other crime in the catalogue. Most of them were laborers, but I note that twenty-seven did nothing and eighteen were preachers. Ninety per cent of the negroes are between the ages of fifteen and forty, and knew nothing of slavery. Only 1 per cent are the old slaves who are over sixty years old. Two hundred and forty-four of them are serving a second term. Thirty are serving a third term and a few a fourth and fifth term. They seem to like it. One thousand and twenty of these convicts are from three counties—Fulton, Chatham and Bibb. As Thomas Jefferson said, "The influence of cities is pestilential to good morals." It is especially so with negroes. The large majority of the negro convicts are from the cities and large towns.

Twenty years ago there were 1,100 negro convicts and 90 per cent of them were wholly illiterate, could neither read nor write. Now he have 4,300 negro convicts and 54 per cent can read and write. How is that? Does education lessen crime or increase it? Mr. Stetson, the state statistician of Massachusetts, says it "increases crime not a little, but immensely," and he proves it. It certainly does among the negro race in Georgia.

It is curious to note that we have two counties in the state—White and Gilmer—that have no representative among the convicts. There are four counties—Towns, Pickens, Banks and Dawson—that have but one each. There are three counties—Union, Murray and Rabun—that have but two each. How is that for good morals in our most northern mountain counties, where the schoolmaster has not been abroad in the land to any alarming extent.

No, the truth is, that education of itself neither lessens nor increases crime. It depends on the moral training that the boys get either from his teacher or his parents or his early associates, but if his environments are bad his education makes him a more dangerous citizen, for it enables him to cover up and conceal his crime or to escape from punishment in some way. It is like throwing pearls before swine to give the vile and vicious an education, but we can't pick them beforehand and so all must have a chance.

But if I was a lawmaker I would put some penalties upon bad citizens, upon the idle and vicious, whether white or black. We do not allow them to have their names in the jury box. They cannot try a man for crime nor set in judgment upon his civil rights. Why should such men be trusted with the ballot? Why not let the same commission that makes up the jury box also make up the ballot box? If some good negroes got in and some bad white men were left out, it would be rewarding merit and putting a penalty upon bad citizens. Alabama and Virginia have this question before their conventions and we hope they will consider it wisely and give encouragement to good citizens, whether they be white or black. Good conduct should be the test. It is more important than education or property. Let us purge the ballot box just as we do the jury box. Purge it once a year. Put such colored men as Gassett and Joe Brown and Tribble in and leave all such white men as Pat Banks out. Don't shut the door forever on good negroes.

By the way, I wish somebody would hunt up our cook and send her home. She is not a "settled 'oman," and is just gallivanting around till her spell is off. I have to get up before I feel like it and fire up the stove and then call the girls and they get a good breakfast in half an hour. Biscuit and coffee and hominy and fried eggs and beefsteak are good enough for anybody, but I will have to discharge our cook and hire her over again and leave out the spell privilege.—Bill Arp, in Atlanta Constitution.

Still we are a nation of farmers. Incomplete census returns show that in 1900 there were 5,700,000 farms under cultivation as compared with 4,564,691 in 1890. This may be deemed a remarkable increase, showing that the growth of our industries is symmetrical, the farmers keeping pace in the march forward. The single discouraging feature of the situation is the increase of tenant farming. This is accounted for, however, to some extent by the lease of lands by immigrants who are intending purchasers. As the area of unoccupied arable lands in the United States becomes less and less it is altogether probable that future censuses of the country will show a comparative decline in the number of farms. The heavy increase in the past ten years is in the nature of a surprise, though the inducements of fine crops and fair prices have doubtless given a spur to land investments since 1896.

According to the Dry Goods Economist "weeding leathers" is thieves' slang for one of the latest forms of shoplifting. The crook in the case, almost invariably a woman, loiters near a counter till she espies a shopper lay down her pocketbook while she examines an article. The "weeder" then steps up, casually throws some merchandise over the "leather" and goes through it with her hands under cover. In cases where the trick is successfully accomplished, how the owner must wonder where on earth the money went!

HOW WILD ANIMALS SLEEP.

Their Slumber Peculiarities Studied by an Expert.

The peculiarities of wild animals during the hours of slumber have been made the subject of investigation by one of those geniuses who are always on the alert for matters of general information. He chose the Central Park menagerie as his place of study, and has reported his discoveries to the New York Evening Post, in the main as here related.

There is nothing odd or peculiar about the sleep of the lions and tigers. In captivity they show the same indifference to danger that they manifest in the jungle, and by day or night will slumber through an unusual tumult, unmindful or unconscious of the noise. Their sleep is commonly heavy and peaceful.

Bears are also heavy sleepers, but less disposed than lions and tigers to slumber in the daytime. Grizzly bears usually curl up under the rocks; but sometimes they crawl up to the very top of the rocks, and with front paws spread around the iron cage bars, go to sleep in what seems an uncomfortable and perilous position; but bears never release their muscular grasp of any object when asleep.

The black bears will curl up among the branches of a tree when they have the opportunity, and go to sleep in this peculiar position. The polar bears show a peculiarity in the selection of their sleeping places. They choose one particular corner of the cage for that purpose, and invariably seek this out for the night's rest.

The high-strung, nervous animals are the most interesting to watch at night. They usually belong to the hunted tribes, whose lives are in constant danger in the forest, and they possess such a high developed nervous system that they really sleep with one eye open. The slightest noise will instantly awaken them.

The prairie wolves merely seem to close their eyes for an instant, and then open them again to see if all is quiet. Many vain attempts have been made to photograph these animals by flash light and without exception the camera has revealed the fact that one eye at least was partly open.

The day-sleepers in the menagerie are for some reason the heaviest slumberers of all, and when they close their eyes in early morning they seem almost as stupid as if drugged. This is in marked contrast to the light night sleepers, which on the approach of danger are instantly awake and on the alert.

Taking Pictures Under Water.

Through the Filipino war the camera likewise proved of more actual service than ever before, and it was constantly developed as an instrument of daily service to the officers. The modern electric signals and telegraphy hardly assumed more importance in the Philippines than the camera. But for that matter electrical and photographic development go hand in hand, and the two have been combined in many ways. Rapid electrical photography has been used by our official army photographers in both the Philippines and in China. Photography under water has also proved of service to our navy. When the Oregon was grounded on the rock in the Far Eastern waters, a photograph under the water was taken to show the exact location of the rock and the nature of the wound to the external shell of the boat. It also revealed the exact nature of her position, so that it could be decided whether it would be advisable to haul her off by the stern. The pictures thus taken of the battleship will prove of imperishable value to the Navy Department and will serve as a concrete study of marine accidents.

Every war correspondent and most officers carry a camera with them now; but the official photographer of each expedition is the man who is held responsible for a reproduction of everything of value. When the present difficulties in and about the Philippines end, the War Department at Washington will have many thousand official pictures to file away and preserve. These photographs will eventually appear in the official war reports of the whole campaign.—Collier's Weekly.

As It Might Have Been.

If the telephone had been in use in Paul Revere's day a writer in the Boston Journal thinks that instead of riding he might have employed that instrument as follows: "Hallo! Yes. Give me—— hello! What's the matter with you, Central? Give me—yes—I want Concord 381—yes, Concord—Concord—three—eight—one—yes, that's it—waiting—waiting—oh, is that you, Concord? Yes? Well, this is Paul Revere. No—No. Revere—Boston. Hey? Never mind who I am. Well, don't get gay with me, or I'll report you. Oh, you are, are you? Well, just tell your folks that the British are landing here in Boston in strong force. Yes, that's it. And just ring up Lexington, will you, and tell them. Thank you. Goodby!"

Loves Laughs at ——.

"Do you think, ma'am," inquired punctilious Bridget, "it would be proper for me to accept of a gift from the butcher's man?"

"The butcher's man?" echoed Agnes Dorothy somewhat blankly over a half-drained cup of breakfast coffee. She had come to recognize Bridget as one in whom the muses of etiquette and grammar maintained an equal and triumphant rule.

"Yes, ma'am, if so happen that you didn't mind, being your tradesman and all that."

"Why, certainly I don't mind, Bridget, if he is a friend of yours. But do you know him quite well?"

"Oh, yes, ma'am—as well as could be by tube."—New York Sun.

DISCOURSE BY THE EMINENT DIVINE LAST SUNDAY.

Subject: The Triumph of Christianity — The Church of Christ is the Most Endearing Institution on Earth—Its Unsurpassed Growth—Infidelity Refuted.

(Copyright 1901.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Although Dr. Talmage was hindered from attending the great annual meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society at Cincinnati, his sermon shows him to be in sympathy with the great movement; text, Amos ix. 13, "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper."

Unable because of other important duties to accept the invitation to take part in the great convention of Christian Endeavorers at Cincinnati, I preach a sermon of congratulation for all the members of that magnificent association, whether now gathered in vast assemblage or busy in their places of usefulness, transatlantic and cisatlantic. And, as it is now harvest time in the fields and sickles are flashing in the gathering of a great crop, I find mighty suggestiveness in my text.

It is a picture of a tropical clime, with a season so prosperous that the harvest reaches clear over to the planting time and the swarthy husbandman, busy cutting the grain, almost feels the breath of the horses on his shoulders, the horses hitched to the plow preparing for a new crop. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper." When is that? That is now. That is this day, when hardly have you done reaping one harvest of religious result than the plowman is getting ready for another.

In phraseology charged with all venom and abuse and caricature I know that infidels and agnostics have declared that Christianity has collapsed; that the Bible is an obsolete book; that the Christian church is on the retreat. I shall answer that wholesale charge to-day.

Between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 Endeavorers sworn before high heaven that they will do all they can to take America for God, Europe for God, Asia and Africa for God—are not the signs most cheering? Or, to return to the agricultural figure of my text, more than a million reapers are overtaken by more than a million plowmen. Besides this, there are more people who believe in the Bible than at any time in the world's existence.

But now let us see whether the book is a last year's almanac. Let us see whether the church of God is a Bull Run retreat, muskets, canteens and haversacks strewing all the way. The great English historian Sharon Turner, a man of vast learning and great accuracy, not a clergyman, but an attorney as well as a historian, gives this overwhelming statistic in regard to Christianity and in regard to the number of Christians in the different centuries: In the first century 500,000 Christians, in the second century 2,000,000 Christians, in the third century 5,000,000 Christians, in the fourth century 10,000,000 Christians, in the fifth century 15,000,000 Christians, in the sixth century 20,000,000 Christians, in the seventh century 24,000,000 Christians, in the eighth century 30,000,000 Christians, in the ninth century 40,000,000 Christians, in the tenth century 50,000,000 Christians, in the eleventh century 70,000,000 Christians, in the twelfth century 80,000,000 Christians, in the thirteenth century 75,000,000 Christians, in the fourteenth century 80,000,000 Christians, in the fifteenth century 100,000,000 Christians, in the sixteenth century 125,000,000 Christians, in the seventeenth century 155,000,000 Christians, in the eighteenth century 200,000,000 Christians—a decadence, as you observe, in only one century and more than made up in the following centuries, while it is the usual computation that there were at the close of the nineteenth century 470,000,000 Christians, making us to believe that before this century is close the millennium will have started its boom and lifted its hosanna.

Poor Christianity! What a pity it has no friends! How lonesome it must be! Who will take it out of the poorhouse? Poor Christianity! Four hundred millions in one century.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century 150 missionaries; at the close of that century 84,000 missionaries and native helpers and evangelists. At the beginning of the nineteenth century there were only 50,000 converts; now there are over 1,000,000 converts from heathendom.

So Christianity is falling back and the Bible, they say, is becoming an obsolete book! I go into a court, and wherever I find a judge's bench or a clerk's desk I find a Bible. Upon what book could there be uttered the solemnity of an oath? What book is apt to be put in the trunk of the young man as he leaves for city life? The Bible. What shall I find in nine out of every ten homes in this city? The Bible. In nine out of every ten homes in Christendom? The Bible. Voltaire wrote the prophecy that the Bible in the nineteenth century would become extinct. The century is gone, and I have to tell you that the room in which Voltaire wrote that prophecy not long ago was crowded from floor to ceiling with Bibles from Switzerland.

Suppose the Congress of the United States should pass a law that there should be no more Bibles printed in America and no Bibles read. If there are 60,000,000 grown people in the United States there would be 60,000,000 people in an army to put down such a law and defend their right to read the Bible. But suppose the Congress of the United States should make a law against the reading or the publication of any other book—how many people would go out in such a crusade? Could you get 60,000,000 people to go out and risk their lives in the defense of Shakespeare's tragedies or Gladstone's tracts or Macaulay's "History of England?" You know that there are a thousand men who would die in defense of this book where there is not more than one man who would die in the defense of any other book. You try to insult my common sense by telling me the Bible is fading out from the world. It is the most popular book of the centuries.

"Oh," say people, "the church is a collection of hypocrites, and it is losing its power, and it is fading out from the world." Is it? A bishop of the Methodist church told me that that denomination averages two new churches every day. In other words, they build 730 churches in that denomination in a year, and there are at least 1500 new Christian churches built in America every year. Does that look as though the Christian church were fading out, as though it were a defunct institution? What stands nearest to the hearts of the American people to-day? I do not care in what village or what city or what neighborhood you go. What is it? Is it the postoffice? Is it the hotel? Is it the lecture hall? Ah, you know it is not. You know that that which stands nearest to the hearts of the American people is the Christian church.

You may talk about the church being a collection of hypocrites, but when the diphtheria sweeps your children off, whom do you send for? The postmaster? The Attorney-General? The hotel keeper? Alderman? No. You send for a minister of this Bible religion. And if there is a song to be sung at the obsequies, what do you want? What does anybody want? The "Marseillaise Hymn?" "God Save the Queen?" Our own grand national air? No. They want the hymn with which they sang their old Christian mother into her last sleep, or they want sung the Sabbath-school hymn which their little girl sang the last Sabbath afternoon she was out before she got that awful sickness which broke your heart. I appeal to your common sense. You know the most endearing institution on earth to-day is the church of the Lord Jesus Christ. A man is a fool that does not recognize it.

The infidels say: "There is great liberty now for infidels—freedom of platform. Infidelity shows its power from the fact that it is everywhere tolerated, and it can say what it will." Why, my friends, infidelity is not half so blatant in our day as it was in the days of our fathers. Do you know that in the days of our fathers there were pronounced infidels in public authority, and they could get any political position? Let a man to-day declare himself antagonistic to the Christian religion, and what city wants him for mayor, what State wants him for Governor, what nation wants him for President or for king? Let a man openly proclaim himself the enemy of our glorious Christianity, and he cannot get a majority of votes in any State, in any city, in any county, in any ward of America. The Christian religion is mightier to-day than it ever was.

These opponents say that science is overcoming religion in our day. They look through the spectacles of the infidel scientists and they say: "It is impossible that this book be true. People are finding it out. The Bible has got to go overboard." Do you believe that the Bible account of the origin of life will be overthrown by infidel scientists who have fifty different theories about the origin of life? If they should all come up in solid phalanx, all agreeing on one sentiment and one theory, perhaps Christianity might be damaged, but there are not so many differences of opinion inside the church as outside the church.

Oh, it makes me sick to see these literary fops going along with a copy of Darwin under one arm and a case of transfixed grasshoppers and butterflies under the other arm, telling about the "survival of the fittest" and Huxley's protoplasm and the nebular hypothesis. The fact is that some naturalists, just as soon as they find out the difference between the feelers of a wasp and the horns of a beetle, begin to patronize the Almighty, while Agassiz, glorious Agassiz, who never made any pretension to being a Christian, put both his feet on the doctrine of evolution and says: "I see that many of the naturalists of our day are adopting facts which do not bear observation or have not passed under observation." These men warring with each other—Darwin warring against Lamarch, Wallace warring against Cope, even Herschel denouncing Ferguson. They do not agree about anything.

Then you have noticed a more significant fact if you have talked with people on the subject—that they are getting dissatisfied with worldly philosophy as a matter of comfort. They say it does not amount to anything when you have a dead child in the house. They tell you when they were sick and the door of the future seemed opening the only comfort they could find was the gospel. People are having demonstrated all over the land that science and philosophy cannot solace the troubles and woes of the world, and they want some other religion, and they are taking Christianity, the only sympathetic religion that ever came into the world. You just take a scientific consolation into that room where a mother has lost her child. Try in that case your splendid doctrine of the "survival of the fittest." Tell her that child died because it was not worth as much as the other children. That is your "survival of the fittest." Just try your transcendentalism, your philosophy, your science, on that widowed soul, and tell her it was a geological necessity that her companion should be taken away from her, just as in the course of the world's history the megatherium and the ichthyosaurus had to pass out of existence, and then you go on in your scientific consolation until you get to the sublime fact that 50,000,000 years from now we ourselves may be scientific specimens on the geologic shelf, petrified specimens of an extinct human race, and after you have got all through with your consolation, if the poor afflicted soul is not crazed by it, we will send forth from any of our churches the plainest Christian we have, and with one half hour of prayer and reading of Scripture promises the tears will be wiped away, and the house from floor to cupola will be flooded with the calmness of an Indian summer sunset. There is where I see the triumph of Christianity. People are dissatisfied with everything else. They want God: they want Jesus Christ.

The fact is that infidelity and agnosticism are founded on ignorance geological, ignorance chemical, ignorance astronomical, ignorance geographical. We have heard what the enemies of Christianity have had to testify. Now I put before you the testimony of the church on earth and the church in heaven. Not fifty, not a thousand, not a million, but all of the church on earth and all of the redeemed in heaven.

Will you take the evidence of those who have witnessed as well as felt the power of religion, or will you prefer the testimony of those who begin by declaring that they have never witnessed or felt its power? You tell me that on a certain 4th of March, twenty years ago, a President of the United States was inaugurated. How do I know it? You tell me there were 20,000 persons who distinctly heard his inaugural address. I deny both. I deny that he was inaugurated. I deny that his inaugural address was delivered. You ask why? I did not see it. I did not hear it. But you say that there were 20,000 people who did see and hear him.

Is not the testimony of the 20,000 who were present worth more than the testimony of one who was absent? Now, there are some men who say they have never seen Christ crowned in the heart, and they do not believe it is ever done. There is a group of men who say they have never heard the voice of Christ, that they have never heard the voice of God. They do not believe that anything like it ever occurred. I point to twenty, a hundred thousand or a million people who say: "Christ was crowned in our heart's affections. We have seen Him and felt Him in our soul, and we have heard His voice. We have heard it in the storm and darkness. We have heard it again and again."

You say morphia puts one to sleep. You say in time of sickness it is very useful. I deny it. Morphia never puts anybody to sleep. It never alleviates pain. You ask why I say that. I have never tried it. I never took it. I deny that morphia is any soothing to the nerves or any quiet in times of sickness. I deny that morphia ever put anybody to sleep. But here are twenty persons who say they have all felt the soothing effects of a physician's prescribing morphine.

Young man, do not be ashamed to be a friend of the Bible. Do not put your thumb in your vest, as young men sometimes do, and swagger about, talking of the glorious light of nature and of there being no need of the Bible. They have the light of nature in India and China and in all the dark places of the earth. Did you ever hear that the light of nature gave them comfort for their troubles? They have lancets to cut and Juggernauts to crush, but no comfort. Ah, my friends, you had better stop your skepticism. Suppose you are put in a crisis like that of Colonel Ethan Allen. I saw the account and at one time mentioned it in an address. A descendant of Ethan Allen, who is an infidel, said it never occurred. Soon after I received a letter from a professor in one of our colleges, who is also a descendant of Ethan Allen and is a Christian. He wrote me that the incident is accurate; that my statement was authentic and true. The wife of Colonel Ethan Allen was a very consecrated woman. The mother instructed the daughter in the truths of Christianity. The daughter sickened and was about to die, and she said to her father, "Father, shall I take your instruction, or shall I take mother's instruction? I am going to die now. I must have this matter decided." That man who had been lead in his infidelity said to his dying daughter: "My dear, you had better take your mother's religion." My advice is the same to you, O young man! You know how ridiculed your mother; you know what she said to you when she was dying. You had better take your mother's religion.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JULY 21.

Subject: Noah Saved in the Ark. Gen. viii., 1-22—Golden Text, Gen. vi., 8—Memory Verses, 20-22—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

Connecting Links.—According to the commonly accepted chronology, more than 1650 years have passed since our last lesson. During that time the Old Testament world became densely populated, and the race had grown exceedingly wicked, so that God decided to destroy them from the face of the earth.

1. "God remembered Noah." Noah himself, though one that had found grace in the eyes of the Lord, yet seemed to be forgotten in the ark, but at length God returned in mercy to him, and that is expressed by His remembering him. The strange work of judgment being over, the saved family, and all in association with them, come into remembrance. "Made a wind." Such a wind as produced a strong and sudden evaporation.

2. "Was restrained." When God's purposes were accomplished it was as easy for Him to restrain the rain as to cause it to rain.

3. "Returned—continually." They gradually departed. The heat of the sun exhaled much, and perhaps the subterraneous caverns soaked in more.

4. "Mountains of Ararat." A region nearly in the middle of Armenia, even now called by the Armenians Ararat, on the mountains of which the ark of Noah rested; sometimes in a wider sense as the whole of Armenia itself. As the drying wind most probably came from the east or north, it is likely that the ark was drifted toward Asia Minor, and caught land on some hill in the region of the Euphrates. It cannot be supposed that it rested on either of the peaks now called Ararat, as Ararat was a country, not a mountain, and these peaks do not seem suitable for the purpose.

7. "Sent forth." Though God had told Noah when the flood would come, even to a day, yet He had not revealed to him the time when the waters would disappear; the knowledge of the former was necessary, while a knowledge of the latter would serve only to gratify his curiosity, and the concealing it from him would serve the purpose of testing his faith and patience. "Raven—to and fro." Going forth and returning. It is generally supposed that the raven flew off and was seen no more; it is evident, however, that she did return, but was not taken into the ark.

8. "He sent forth a dove." He sent forth the dove three times. The first time it speedily returned; the second time it returned bringing with it an olive leaf, and the third time it went forth to return no more. The dove is an emblem of a soul, which, finding no rest or satisfaction in this sinful world, returns to Christ as to its ark; the carnal heart like the raven takes up with the world and feeds on the carrion it finds there. As Noah put forth his hand and took the dove into the ark, so Christ will graciously receive those who come to Him for rest.

11. "An olive leaf." An emblem of the restoration of peace between God and the earth; and from this circumstance the olive has been the emblem of peace among all civilized nations. Sweet emblem of the renewed mind which, amid the surrounding desolation, seeks and finds its rest and portion in Christ, and not only so, but also lays hold of the earnest of the inheritance, and furnishes the blessed proof that judgment has passed away and that a renewed earth is coming fully into view. The carnal mind, on the contrary, can rest in anything and everything but Christ; it (like the raven) can feed upon all uncleanness.

14. "Second month," etc. From this it appears that Noah was in the ark a complete solar year, or 365 days.

16. "Go forth of the ark." Noah did not leave the ark until the command came from God. It was the Lord who was directing this whole matter.

20. "Noah builded an altar." The first thing that Noah did after his wonderful preservation was to pay his debt of gratitude to God, who had so wonderfully preserved him. Adam, Cain and Abel offered sacrifices, and there can be no doubt that they had altars on which they offered them, but this, builded by Noah, is certainly the first on record. The word which we render altar signifies properly a place for sacrifice. Altar comes from the Latin altus, high or elevated, because places for sacrifice were generally either raised very high or built on the tops of hills and mountains; hence they are called high places in the Scriptures, but these were chiefly used for idolatrous purposes. "Unto the Lord." It was "unto the Lord" he erected this altar. Superstition would have worshiped the ark, as being the means of salvation, but Noah's faith passed beyond the ark to the God of the ark, and hence when he stepped out of it, instead of casting back a lingering look at it, or regarding it as an object of worship, he built an altar unto the Lord and worshiped Him, and the ark is never heard of again. "Burnt offerings." This was "an acknowledgment of guilt and an atonement for sin, a grateful recognition of God's authority and goodness, the means of securing His favor, and a token of the giver's self-dedication to His service." At first sacrifices were offered by individuals, as Cain and Abel; but after the flood by heads of families, or tribes. This offering was a very expressive type of the sacrifice of Christ, as nothing less than His complete and full sacrifice could make atonement for the sin of the world. In most other offerings the offerer had a share, but in the whole burnt offering all was given to God.

21. "Smelled a sweet savour." That is, He was well pleased with this act. "Said in his heart." In chap. 9: 8-17, God made the covenant with Noah that He had in His heart to make. "Will not again curse." When Noah and his family first began to make their homes on the land there would be a fear at every rain that it might be the beginning of another flood. This would interfere not only with their comfort, but with their progress. What would be the use of building houses or cultivating fields that might at any time be destroyed? The covenant was God's solemn promise in their behalf.

22. "Earth remaineth." Here it is plainly intimated that the earth is not to remain always; it, and all the works therein, must be burned up. 2 Pet. 3: 7. "Seedtime and harvest," etc. The Lord promises two signs as the guarantee, the visible proof, that the earth would never again be destroyed by a flood. The first was that seedtime and harvest and day and night should not cease while the earth remained; the second was the bow set in the cloud. Chap. 9: 13.

THE Southern Normal Musical Institute, which will commence a session at Clanton on Monday next, is attracting considerable attention, and a large number of students and visitors is expected. In addition to the studies, Clanton, we are satisfied will do its best to entertain them. Ladies and gentlemen we bid you welcome.

THE fire at Clanton last week was a bad blow for our town, but we are proud to say energetic citizens are already at work to make good the damage done. No certain clue has been found to the origin of the fire, which at present remains a mystery. But there is a determined purpose to get to the bottom of it, and also to prevent further loss. The formation of a fire company is probable, and other precautions are being taken. It is unfortunate that very little insurance was carried and the loss is a direct one to the sufferers. When the burned out district is rebuilt with brick, and the insurance companies will grant a reasonable rate, doubtless insurance will become popular.

It is rather singular that in order to make room for an account of the fire, The Banner (which was made up ready to go to press) found it expedient to take out the advertisement of the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Association. There is a moral in this. Don't put your insurance aside on any account. Always pay your premium as soon as it is due. If you want to insure, don't wait until after you are burned out and then be sorry you have neglected it.

Active.

Health of this community is very good, but we are needing rain badly. Some of our farmers have almost got the blues since the hot wave went through this part of the county. Some corn is almost falling down. But everybody seems to be very lively around Active.

Saw mills are getting plentiful in this section; there will be five mills within five miles of Active, all on the same road before long.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

The Convention has changed the date of the State elections from August to November, the same day as the Federal election, and fixed the terms of Senators and Representatives at four years. The Legislature is to meet only once every four years.

Senators shall be at least 27 years of age, and Representatives 21 years of age: they shall have been citizens and residents for three years and residents of their respective counties or districts one year next before their election, if such county or district shall have been so long established, but if not, then of the county or district from which the same shall have been taken: and they shall reside in their respective counties or districts during their terms of service.

The legislature shall meet quadrennially, at the capitol in the senate chamber and in the hall of the House of Representatives, (except in cases of the destruction of the capitol, or epidemics, when the governor may convene them at such place in the state as he may deem best) on the day specified in this constitution prescribed by law: and shall not remain in session longer than sixty days at the first session held under this constitution, nor longer than fifty days at any subsequent session.

PERPETUAL MOTION.

forty minutes is all we are allowed here, then on again all through the night, and all next day, arriving at San Antonio about 10 p. m. Early next morning we reach Houston where we breakfast, and about 9 a. m. Beaumont. We see the oil derricks at some little distance from the railroad, and the town itself is full of life and bustle, much resembling Birmingham in boom days. Only a few minutes and we are off again; the corn and cotton looks well, and the Texas towns we pass through look prosperous.

Louisiana smiles upon us fresh and green, and in the course of the afternoon we get into the first shower of rain since we left Alabama. About 7 p. m. Friday, we arrive at New Orleans and the first good-byes are spoken, some continuing their homeward flight, but the majority remain over for the night, taking in the sights of New Orleans.

Saturday morning we are again on board for our last stage. Mississippi is soon crossed and once more we are at home in old Alabama. Mobile is soon reached, and while we are somewhat delayed by an accident to the locomotive at Letohatchie we arrive safely at Montgomery at 7:45 p. m., and Birmingham about 10, just fifteen days from the time we started.

We had travelled over the following railroad systems, and to their careful and skilful handling and courteous treatment much of the trip is due:

The L. & N., from Montgomery to Birmingham.

The K.-C., Fort Scott & Birmingham, from Birmingham to Kansas City.

The Santa Fe, from Kansas City to San Francisco.

The Southern Pacific (Sunset Route) from San Francisco to Los Angeles and New Orleans.

The L. & N., from New Orleans to Montgomery and Birmingham.

To my fellow-travellers I now bid adieu. We have had a most delightful trip, made, I hope, new friends, and gained new experiences, which should aid us all in our life's work.

Good by! May God be with you!
This is the prayer of those we love—
Good by, dear friends, may God be with you
Until we meet in realms above.
Six thousand miles we've travelled over —May all your lives as pleasant be
As that six thousand, exceeded only
By immense eternity.

Late Literary News

It is probably true that a most every man has in him certain qualities which would draw some woman to him, but it is difficult to frame a statement in general terms of "What Women Like in Men." This is the task which a very well-known author, under the nom-de-plume of RAFFORD PYKE, has undertaken in THE COSMOPOLITAN for July in a clever essay, which proves him to have made woman the subject of thorough observation and comprehensive study. "The foreign girl," says the author, "marries the man with whom she will be happy, the American marries the man without whom she will be unhappy."

Ours a Sovereign Nation.

The confusion of mind that has prevailed in many quarters from the beginning seems to be due largely to the failure to grasp the nature of a written constitution, and its relation to the exercise of general powers of sovereignty by a government. There is no nation in the world, and probably has never been one in which any generation supposed that it would devise a written instrument of organic law which would effectively prevent its successors from availing themselves of opportunities that might arise to extend their territorial jurisdiction. The primary object of the American Constitution was to arrange an effective and permanent scheme of partnership and union for a group of associated States which were not suitably organized under the old Articles of Confederation. It was taken as a matter of course from the very beginning that this partnership should constitute an authority capable of acquiring and governing outside territory. It, indeed, the great expanses of territory that were acquired one after another were for the most part somewhat rapidly formed into States which in quick order accepted as members of the partnership, this course of proceeding was not in the least due to any constitutional obligations, but solely to the fact that it accorded with the interests and inclination of the American people to follow just that line of action. In other words, the United States, quite apart from any obligations incurred by treaty, or agreements of any other sort, rested under no temptation whatever to hold the great Northwestern Territory or the lands of the Louisiana Purchase in political subjection and bondage. The gentlemen who have been using the word empire so freely as a term of reproach to the present administration, and to the Supreme Court on account of its recent decisions, do not seem to have kept in mind the essential nature of governmental and political institutions—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for July.

A WORTHY SUCCESSOR.
"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucuous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "SNUFFLES" the GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

"SNUFFLES" is the only perfect CATARRH CURE ever made and is now recognized as the only safe and positive cure for that annoying and disgusting disease. It cures all inflammation quickly and permanently and is also wonderfully quick to relieve HAY FEVER or COLD in the HEAD.

CATARRH when neglected often leads to CONSUMPTION—"SNUFFLES" will save you if you use it at once. It is no ordinary remedy, but a complete treatment which is positively guaranteed to cure CATARRH in any form or stage if used according to the directions which accompany each package. Don't delay but send for it at once, and write full particulars as to your condition, and you will receive special advice from the discoverer of this wonderful remedy regarding your case without cost to you beyond the regular price of "SNUFFLES" the "GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE."

Sent prepaid to any address in the United States or Canada on receipt of One Dollar. Address Dept C.935 EDWIN B GILES & COMPANY, 2330 and 2332 Market Street, Philadelphia.

The Pea Crop.

Plant peas about an inch deep, and make the ground fine. Use plenty of seed, as the plants may be thickly grown in the rows on good soil. Keep the grass down, working the surface soil only lightly. As soon as the vines have ceased bearing pull them up and plant cabbage, beans or any summer crop on the plot.

Anchoring a Water Fence.

Where a fence must be carried across a stream or out into the edge of a river or pond, the plan shown in the cross section given herewith will be found useful. Two logs are placed side by side, and cross pieces of timber are spiked to them. To these cross pieces fence posts are spiked, and boards nailed to these, as suggested. The logs are kept in any position desired by anchoring them with wires attached to boxes of stones sunk to the bottom of the stream. Such a fence cannot be upset.—New York Tribune.

The Value of a Bee Smoker.

The bee smoker is a great help in working among bees, and if every one who keeps bees would provide themselves with a good smoker, it would possibly be the means of getting much better returns from their bees, than to try to get along without it. Small beekeepers, such as farmers, do not provide many necessities in the line of the management of their bees, and in most cases they do not have a smoker at all. No one needs a smoker so bad as the farm beekeeper, for he does not usually study the management of bees without positive protection, such as smoke will afford. The farmer has but a few minutes to attend to his bees, and without smoke he usually makes a failure in the short bit of time he has to bestow upon them.

Quick work with bees demand smoke, whereas with lots of time and patience we can get along in many cases without it, but it does not pay to thus spend the time necessary to do it, and the smoker enables us to do good, effective and quick work with bees. Everyone should provide themselves with a good bee smoker who keeps but a colony of bees, and in every case enough extra may be made from the bees to pay for several smokers. Really, the smoker is the secret of success in handling bees, and getting the best returns from them. No apiarist can be found, it matters not whether he is an expert in handling bees or not, but is supplied with a bee smoker, and it is his constant companion when working with the bees.

There is no other method of applying smoke to bees that will absolutely control them, and it is no use of thinking that you can furnish a substitute that will answer the purpose. You may furnish smoke enough to quiet a colony of bees on the start, but about the time you have the hive open ready to do some important work, the bees come out at you by the dozens, and your substitute smoker is not the thing to put up a defence against such an attack, and the bees have possession of the entire situation. The bee smoker is always charged and ready for such occasions.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

Best Methods of Cultivating Corn.

If the preparation of the seed bed, the selection of seed and the planting have been well done, the cultivation of the corn crop will be easy and will accomplish its best results. The cultivator should have in mind at least four objects, viz., the conservation of moisture, the destruction of weeds, the feeding of the corn plant and the aeration of the corn roots.

The time, manner and frequency of the cultivations will be modified by the condition of the soil, but should be adapted to best effect the foregoing objects. Generally it is best to begin with the harrow before or soon after the corn is up, and cross-harrow in four or five days. The importance of this early and thorough work with the harrow cannot be overestimated, and ought not in any case to be neglected. This harrowing destroys the first crop of weeds, which is always the most injurious to the growing corn, and pulverizes the surface soil, forming the moisture below against the time of drouth most sure to come.

Follow the harrow with the cultivator, using small shovels and running close and deep the first plowing. Cultivate every week, the cultivations after the first being shallow and farther away from the corn, until the corn is too tall for the cultivator.

The impression is quite prevalent that a corn crop is well cultivated when it is plowed or cultivated three times. Three cultivations may be sufficient for the best results in some instances, but five or six are sometimes necessary. If a farmer contemplates planting and cultivating forty acres of corn with one team, it is a mistake. It would be better to plant twenty or thirty acres and give it the cultivation necessary to attain the best results, and use the remainder of the forty for pasture or some other crop.

The question of deep or shallow cultivation has its advocates pro and con, and will perhaps never be settled to the satisfaction of all, but the preponderance of opinion, based upon experience and backed by the principles of science, favors shallow cultivation, at least shallow enough to prevent the destruction of the corn roots, which form a network a few inches below the surface surrounding the plant. Deep cultivating tears out these feeding roots and limits the corn plant to a very small area for food and moisture, which we seek to save and render more available by cultivation.—A. D. McCallen, in American Agriculturist.

PROOF OF THE DELUGE

Geological Evidences That Have Been Found at Mt. Ararat.

Evidences have been found of a former great sea around Mt. Ararat. The biblical account of the flood is substantiated! Dr. Frederick J. Wright, Professor of the Harmony of Science and Revelation at Oberlin College, tells of his great discovery in a convincing article in McClure's Magazine for June. While traveling in Asia he found geological conditions such as only could be explained by a vast internal submergence of all that region where the Scriptures locate the flood. The evidences of the deluge Dr. Wright sets forth very clearly, and his conclusions are so logical as to admit of no question. The facts as they appear to him, based on the story in the Bible and the geological conditions, are as follows:

"Some time during the prevalence of glacial ice over Northern America and Northwestern Europe, man came into existence in Central Asia, where the climate was still congenial. From this point he spread as far West as the Atlantic seaboard in Europe, and eastward to the Pacific Coast, whence he succeeded in reaching, by way of the Bering Sea and Alaska, the western coast of North America, and thence migrated to the Atlantic Coast, where his remains are found in the glacial gravels of Trenton, New Jersey. But the extreme and rapid changes incident to the closing stages of the glacial period naturally, and very likely, exterminated man.

In Asia the rapidity of the subsidence spoken of, though so great that man could not adjust himself to it, might still have been so slow as to be almost imperceptible. But towards the close of this period there were 120 years (specially mentioned in the Bible as a time of warning) in which the movement was accelerated to such a degree that the rising waters gave point to the preaching of Noah. During the last 371 days of this period the catastrophe culminated in the facts specifically related in the Book of Genesis, when the reverse movement began and cleared a space near Mount Ararat on which the ark could rest, and where the race could make a new start under more favorable conditions."

The Deadly Rowboat.

The boating season has barely opened and yet two distressing fatalities are reported in which ten lives were lost. At Philadelphia a party of young picknickers in a rowboat were swept over one of the most dangerous dams in the Schuylkill River and seven out of the eight occupants were drowned, while at Cleveland three young men were thrown from a boat into the river and sank before help could reach them. This is indeed a doleful inauguration of a season usually so fraught with peril to the thoughtless and inexperienced rowers. We doubt, however, whether even this terrible warning so early in the season will suffice to check the heedless people who risk their own and other peoples' lives in a pastime that should only be undertaken under the most careful direction.

To the foolish people who rock the boat and to the thousands of would-be oarsmen, who go rowing upon streams that hide dangerous currents, these early fatalities should prove an effective warning. We doubt whether they will, and the way of safety for their companions is to stay on land and let the venturesome and inexperienced boatmen put only their own lives in jeopardy.—Pittsburg Chronicle Telegraph.

Widening London Bridge.

Twenty years ago it was estimated that 200,000 persons crossed London Bridge daily, 130,000 on foot and the rest in vehicles. With the growth of population these number have almost doubled, in spite of the relief afforded by the building of the Tower Bridge, half a mile down stream. It, has, therefore, become an urgent matter to increase the capacity of the older bridge, and it has now been decided to accomplish this by means of granite corbels which will carry the footways as projections over the water on each side of the bridge. This will increase the width of the structure from fifty-three and a half feet to sixty-five feet. The present solid parapet will be removed, and an open balustrade will take its place, an alteration which will compensate to some extent for the extra weight of the new corbels. There are already two tube electric railways beneath the Thames, and a third is in process of construction; but the relief to traffic on the bridges, although it must be great, is not perceptible.—Chambers's Journal.

The world's stock of paper money is now $900,000,000, equal to the existing stock of gold coin.

TALKS ABOUT WOMANKIND

No Waistband Wanted.

Very smart shirtwaists are made up with no gathers in the front, and no waistband either. The object is to have the wearer or her maid arrange the fullness in long becoming folds after the shirtwaist is put on. The folds are pinned tightly as low down as possible to the corsets. This is the only way to present the fashionable effect of a shirtwaist up to date. No stitching can hold the plaits in shape as skilfully as the pins are able to accomplish.

Narrow Pipings.

Instead of lace one sees taffeta employed to trim a foulard silk. It may seem odd to decorate one silk fabric with another, but it is quite fashionable. Pipings of black taffeta print a a smart pattern on an almond green foulard around the hips like a low girdle and straight down the front. Here and there on the Eton and once only on the sleeves. Sometimes the pipings are waved, fluting up and down with undulations. Quite as often the pipings adhere to straight lines in the effort to follow "tailor" smartness.

What Babies Should Wear.

All very small children should be dressed in white. It is a great mistake to put them into colors. There are plenty of inexpensive materials in white to choose from to make a variety. So soon as the baby is old enough to creep, she can have little dimity creeping frocks, or even brown holland ones, to put on over the white frock, and in that way the fashion is not so expensive as it seems. If extra warmth is desired, it can be obtained by a thin flannel worn under the frock. Very long waisted effects are now fashionable as soon as children are put into short clothes; the waist is a mass of horizontal tucks and lines of embroidery, with ruffles put on in bertha style around the yoke or guimpe. With these frocks there are white sashes of the same material edged with lace, or soft ribbon sashes in bright colors, and for smart occasions shoulder knots of ribbons to match the sashes. Colored socks and shoes the same color as the ribbons look very dainty and cunning, and are not very expensive. When children can wear the ankle ties these also can be found in all colors. —Harper's Bazar.

She Talks to the Feathered Creatures.

Reina V. Wright has learned the language of all Wisconsin species of feathered creatures, and can talk to them as one of her own family. She did not study at universities to learn the habits of birds, but with her love for everything that flies she studied them in the recesses of the woods or in the barnyard. Miss Wright has not confined her studies to bird talk but has delved into the mysteries of the spoken words of various animals. She has been successful to a considerable extent in learning the inflection of the language used by dogs, cattle and even cats. But she still prefers the cadence of the canary. Though now only 18 years old, she has been talking to birds for six years. She discovered her own gift, and from the first time that her imitation brought a circle of wild bird listeners to her side she has devoted most of her days to the study of the bird language. She has passed the stage when she would go into the woods for the mere pleasure of imitating the birds, but the time was when she would sit on a log in the woods and call the birds to her side. When she would begin her call birds by the hundred would gather in the trees about her, and except for a fluttering of wings would remain silent till she had finished her song. Then they would break forth in song, each doing its best, apparently, to outdo the girl who had stolen its cadence. Miss Wright is now a teacher of elocution at Grafton Hall, Fond du Lac. Her ability in bird imitating brought her to the notice of people who made it possible for her to attend the Ralston University of Expression and Physical Culture at Washington. There she was put under the direct care of President Edgerly. She graduated in 1900. —Chicago Record-Herald.

Kinswoman of Lincoln.

Amanda Poorman is the widowed daughter of Dennis Hanks, the cousin, boyhood friend and companion of Abraham Lincoln. She is 68 years of age, and is now, and for the last five years has been housekeeper in the family of J. S. Cunningham of Mattoon, Ill. During that time she has tenderly nursed the invalid wife of Mr. Cunningham, who for the last two years has been confined, a patient sufferer, to her bed.

During Lincoln's struggles in early life, and for many years after his death, Dennis Hanks lived at Charleston, the county seat of this (Coles) county, and his humble home was the scene of many a visit from Lincoln, where he was a most welcome guest. In those early days Lincoln wore a pair of pantaloons with two patches where needed most, and Hanks called them Lincoln's spectacled breeches. Mrs. Hanks repaired rents in his clothing, and when she saw him coming she would hang an extra pot in the fireplace, for he was a great eater, and was fond of the pioneer dish of mush and milk. Amanda, then a child, gave up her bed and slept upon the floor that Lincoln might have where to rest. Many a time he sat with the family at the Hanks fireside, and far into the night made jovial the hours with his stories and drollery, with Amanda a fascinated listener.

Lincoln loved and honored this daughter of the family, and to gratify her childish fancy one time purchased for her the last thing in the world she needed—a brightly colored parasol. It is a pathetic sequel to those pioneer times that this child friend of the great Lincoln, now at the age of 68 years, is constrained by circumstances to maintain existence by toil and labor as housekeeper in an humble cottage home in this city of Mattoon.—Philadelphia Record.

Queen Alexandra's Jewels.

The jewel casket of Queen Alexandra contains a rare colection of precious stones. Pearls and diamonds are most in evidence, for these are the gems of royalty all the world over. A souvenir from Queen Victoria is a parure of opals and diamonds, and a beautiful necklace of pearls and diamonds was one of her husband's first gifts. On their wedding day he gave her a diadem of brilliants, and on the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage a diamond and ruby cross. The diadem consists of brilliants arranged in two rows, with ten large brilliants at equal distance, surmounted by scroll ornaments, the latter connected by Greek devices in brilliants.

A ruby and necklace from her sister, the wife of the late czar, a diamond and pearl necklace, with earrings to match, from the corporation of the city of London, and a diamond tiara, consisting of 365 beautiful stones, are among the handsomest of her jewelry possessions.

The queen has a large collection of bracelets, the most interesting being one that was presented to her on her marriage by eight bridesmaids. It is of gold, brilliantly set and divided into eight compartments, each containing a miniature portrait of one of the bridesmaids. On the reverse side the queen's initials appear in diamonds on a ground of enamel in garter blue tint.

One of the many jeweled crosses in this royal casket, and the most prized of all, is Queen Dagmar's cross—an exact replica of one made for Queen Dabmar several centuries ago and a cherished heirloom in the Danish royal family. A diamond cross on a string of pearls from the ladies of Liverpool, a diamond and opal bracelet from the ladies of Manchester, and a diamond studded one from the ladies of Leeds are other beautiful gifts.

A silver wedding present from the Grand lodge of Free Masons was a magnificent butterfly, consisting of over 200 of the finest Brazilian diamonds and eyes of rubies. Some lovely sapphires, combined with diamonds, and Indian jewelry of the finest wrought and chased gold, set with pearls, rubies and diamonds, represent other treasures which find a place in the collection of England's queen.—Chicago Chronicle.

FOR WOMAN'S BENEFIT

Pretty, snug, heavy, trim little tailor jackets are charming made of some rough white cloth.

Thin light waists which have a blind opening are buttoned underneath with small wash button cloth buttons.

Ringed and spotted nets, plain tulles, lace and every sort of lovely brocade are being shown for summer frocks.

Old-fashioned muslins wrought with embroidery are going to trim summertime's cambric shirt, arranged to outline yokes, revers or in fichu effects.

Silk folds can be bought ready made, and dotted with different kinds of gold or steel beads, or folds can be found set together with lace stitches ready for use.

A long dust coat of white serge has the seams strapped with white silk, a big ecru lace collar and long white ribbon ends to tie into a big bow at the neck. There is a shaped flounce of the serge.

Troops of parasols are ready for warm weather, with painted sticks, crystal knob ends and gilt frames covered with hemstitched and openwork silk, which should match the dress or toque.

Cotton gloves are being largely worn this year. They wash, wear and fit so well that they are economical and attractive, and without much expense a woman can wear clean gloves, an important essential.

Corset covers and skirts combined have the waist fitted snugly and boned. They slop off into the skirt like a princess frock. There are no sleeves, not even a strop over the arm, and the waist fits so snugly that they are not necessary.

One of the prettiest cotton goods in the market is the silk broche chambray, which has a silky effect and raised polka dots in the color of the material. In addition to the beautiful finish of the chambray there are the exquisite colors, green and blue and pink and lavender, in the soft shades which are peculiar to the material.

A feature of fashionable gowns is the arrangement of bands. White linen bands are used on a raspberry-colored dress. The bands are studded with French knots in either black or raspbery pink embroidery, cottons or floss silk. Sometimes the bands receive a regular design, trailing bands or buds or single flowers or geometrical figures applied at intervals. Bands of ecru embroidery make effective applications. You see them on blue cloths and blue silk summer frocks

LOBSTERS GROWING SCARCER.

Efforts of the United States Fish Commission to Supply the Deficiency.

The last report of the United States Fish Commission is a discouraging one for the lobster eaters. It shows so rapid a decline in the annual yield of lobsters that the day seems not very far distant when lobsters will be so scarce that their prices will put them almost within the terrapin class.

The lobster fields extend all along the coast from Maine to Delaware and over this entire area there was a decrease in the annual take of from 50 to 60 per cent, and an increase of the market price of the fish of from 50 to 70 per cent.

In the Urgent Deficiency bill passed by Congress a year ago last February provision was made for a special investigation of the decline in the lobster fisheries and the fish experts have been studying the problem ever since, but with no very striking results. The catching of lobsters on a large scale is comparatively a simple matter, but the rearing of the young to the point where they can take care of themselves is a difficult undertaking involving questions which have not yet been solved. The report of the Fish Commission says:

"Owing to the continued decrease of the lobster fishery, strenuous efforts have been made during the past two years to increase the output of lobster fry, but the scarcity of lobsters and the difficulties encountered in getting the egg lobsters from the fishermen, notwithstanding the cordial co-operation of the State commissioners throughout New England, has made this impossible.

"Arrangements were made during the winter months to collect all the egg-bearing lobsters captured from Eastport to New York. The Grampus, assisted by a steam smack, plied along the coast of Maine and visited all the important fishing centres from early in April to July. Besides this local agents were stationed from Kittery to New London, Conn., who purchased egg lobsters, not only from the fishermen, but also from the dealers in the large towns. These were then transferred to Wood's Hole and Gloucester by sail and steamboats provided for this purpose.

"Notwithstanding the efforts made, only 6,443 egg lobsters were secured north of Cape Cod. These yielded 93,635,000 eggs, from which were hatched 58,560,000 fry, which were deposited on suitable grounds along the coast. At Wood's Hole only 28,140,000 eggs were secured and 22,643,000 hatched."

A Model Municipality.

In Prussia the towns present a spectacle of autonomy and freedom from bureaucratic influence which may well excite our envy. The town council of Dusseldorf, for instance, extends its authority over a far wider sphere than any corresponding body in England. The town council is at once town council, school board and poor-law authority. The extent of its activity is wonderful. Water works, gas, electric-lighting, slaughter houses, ice manufactories, cattle markets, cemeteries, art museums, theater, opera house, concert halls, hospitals and orphanages are among the many enterprises of the municipality. It is not necessary to promote bills in parliament. What the council thinks good for the town is carried out without delay. There are no vexatious inquiries, and in most cases no veto exercised by the government departments. It will interest our readers to learn that loans, as a rule, are borrowed for one hundred years and that the capital invested in some of the working class dwellings is spread over a still longer period. The factories in Dusseldorf are distributed around the suburbs. People passing through the central part of the town would never suspect their presence. Working people, therefore, it will be seen, pass outward to their work and return into the town for the evening.—London News.

What He Wanted to Know.

A rather amusing story is told in connection with a certain learned professor. He had been asked to deliver a lecture —which he readily consented to do—in the village school room, and on the important night the place was packed with an expectant audience.

The front seats were occupied by a few of the shining lights of the neighborhood, and apparently the lecturer was addressing the select few, for he talked completely over the heads of the rest of the audience.

At length, at the expiration of a couple of hours, the professor dropped his lofty style and blandly remarked:

"And now, friends, in conclusion allow me to say that if any one has a question to ask I will do my best to answer him."

It was a very old villager in the back seat who slowly rose to his feet and asked the first and only question.

"Aw'd be wurry much obleeged, seaster," he remarked, "if ye'd jest tell us wot on airth it is that ye've been praiching aboot?"—Detroit Free Press.

Good Place For Lazy Men.

Henry Sandham, the well known Boston artist, who with his family is now pleasantly located in the Azores, writes home most enthusiastically of the place and the air of hospitality which is to be found everywhere. "Fancy the joy of living," he writes, "in a place where you do not breakfast till 11, dine at 4 and have tea at 11.30; where it's always warm and comfortable; where everyone on the street bows to you and runs eagerly to do you some service; where there are great, large tropical gardens filled with every flower of the world, familiar and strange; where fish, the most delicious imaginable, are pulled from the sea into the fire, and thence to your table; where you can live like a duke for 90 cents a day and where you can go to church every day in the week if you are fond enough of sculpture and carving, fairer than you have seen elsewhere."—Boston Transcript.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

American wheat and American [illegible] will be in even greater demand in Europe this year than usual if the recent reports of short and ruined crops in Europe are anywhere near correct.

One of the embarrassments to which the philanthropist is subjected comes from a wholly illogical idea that because he is rich and generous he is, as a matter of course, able to make a good speech.

There is a project afoot in Washington to establish a steam laundry at the crossroads. This may be due to a belief that farmers have become so prosperous that they will want their shirts starched and work in.

Almost anything seems possible in this inventive age. Edison's new building material which is poured into place and then allowed to harden, may enable builders to make their estimates by the gallons instead of by the cubic feet.

The classic lock step has been abolished in the prisons of New York. So in future the released convict will not give any indication of his term by his gait. Truly this is a philanthropic age, careful of the feeling of criminals, be they good or bad.

The public telephones of the "penny-in-the-slot" type which were placed in some of the Paris post offices a few months ago have proved unsatisfactory and have been removed. Many people complained that after putting money in the slot they could obtain no communication.

The corset, chiefly of use heretofore in preserving the shape, is now a life saver as well. As perfected by its inventor it may be inflated that it can even be pulled under water by an ordinary force. The defenders of the much discussed garment will doubtless be willing to sink or swim by this new test.

Baggage has recently been defined by an Ohio judge, according to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, to mean "such articles of personal necessity or convenience as are usually carried by passengers for their personal use," but does not include "merchandise or other valuables intended for other purposes, such as sale or the like." The test is whether or not the articles carried are fit and proper for their owner's personal use in connection with the journey.

A statistician who claims to have given the matter especial attention says that the men and women of America are gaining constantly in stature and weight and also in physical development. It cannot be doubted that in beauty, especially among the women, there is corresponding encouragement; in the development, and in the morals of both it is an assured fact that vast improvement is being made, observes the St. Louis Star.

A well-known writer in America has been covered with contumely and disgrace in several ways because he ridiculed the practice of dueling in the army. Austrian soldiers are just now their idols of the false sense of honor and the disregard of the higher motives which can sway humanity when they display such devotion to the worn code of evil. The duel evidently should be dismissed to the limbo of unhappy, far off things, and battles long ago.

The belief that all the latest troubles in China does not lie at the door of the Chinese is expressed in a letter by W. C. Jameson Reid, who defends his position by strong arguments and narrates the story of the successive croachments of European powers to show how natural it was that the aggressions should stimulate an anti-foreign spirit. Mr. Reid, who knows the East well, suggests that outside nations will find it more to their advantage to cultivate a merely commercial trade with China, rather than an political interest in that country.

After the feasibility of using the photograph or drawing over a telegraph wire had once been demonstrated it was natural that some one should try the same thing by wireless telegraphy. And a fair degree of success attended the experiment. Of course it would not be possible to transmit pictures by this means as with a metallic conductor. Yet the system has its advantages. Occasions are likely to arise when it will be desirable to send from a yacht, merchant steamer or other vessel, rather than a land station, and though the demand for such service is likely to be limited, it is satisfactory to know that it is possible.

Cleveland has had a trial of a street sweeper, running on an electric road, and getting its power from an auxiliary motor. It was pronounced a success. Preceding the sweeper in use was a trolley water-tank by which the street was sprinkled from the middle of the tracks to the curb. The sweeper, with a revolving brush [illegible] feet long, which piled the dirt in a row close to the curb. The work was thoroughly done, according to the reports in the Cleveland papers, and done quickly, the trolley sprinkling at the rate of seven miles an hour. This invention, while a great thing for the city is its economy, may be a thing for prospective street railway companies. Among the requirements demanded in some places for franchises are the paving and sprinkling of streets and the removal of snow. As a condition to these requirements, the cleaning of the streets by the sweeper.

R. R. COLLISION IN MISSOURI

Twenty-one persons are dead and a large number seriously hurt as a result of a head-end collision between a passenger and a fast live stock train on the Chicago and Alton Railroad near Norton, Mo., early Thursday morning. Six were killed outright. The passenger train was traveling in three sections on account of the heavy Epworth League business to San Francisco. The wrecked train was the first section and contained no Leaguers. Conductor McAnna of the freight train had been ordered to meet the second section of the passenger at Slater, the next station east of Norton. The front brakeman on the freight says Conductor McAnna took the throttle himself on leaving Marshall and was running the engine when the collision occurred. The trains met on a curve surmounting a high embankment. The trains collided while going at a good rate of speed. The engines were practically demolished and the forward Pullman and the tourist sleeper in front were burned.

Captain C. F. Watts of the ill fated brig. E. F. Munson has returned to Tampa, Fla., a physical wreck and tells a thrilling story of the wreck of his vessel. The suffering of captain and his crew was something horrible. Upon a little raft, without food or water, under a blistering sun for three days, followed by huge, gloating sharks, seeing vessels pass within hailing distance then fade away. Captain Watts says he does not believe his men will recover from their exposure, as when he left Key West they were in horrible shape.

MARINE BOILER EXPLODES.

An excursion boat anchored in the Susquehanna river off Sunbury, Pa., blew up with terrific force Saturday, killing two boys and injuring a dozen other persons, two fatally. One man is missing and many have been killed: The boys killed and injured were fishing on a near-by wharf when the explosion occurred. The engineer was absent at the time, leaving the boat in charge of the pilot. No cause is given for the explosion.

BLOW IN MISSISSIPPI.

A terrific wind and rain storm struck McComb City, Miss., Friday doing considerable damage in blowing down trees, destroying some buildings and unroofing others. A game base ball was in progress, a large crowd being in attendance; the crowd ran for shelter. A party of a dozen took refuge under a gallery, and a few minutes later the gallery was blown down, burying the people beneath it, fatally injuring one person and seriously bruising five others.

TEXAS TROUBLES.

Owing to recent heavy rains in southwestern Texas the rise of the Guadaloupe river proves to be worse than expected. All the buildings on a ranch on the north fork are a complete loss with their contents; the occupants barely escaping with their lives. Numerous fishing parties have lost their entire outfits, including wagons and teams. Two boys named Hale, camping on the south fork, are reported missing.

GEORGIA COTTON BUSINESS.

The Strickland cotton mills, at Valdosta, Ga., will shortly increase equipment by the addition of 1,000 spindles. It has already 10,000 spindles but the increase in orders requires a larger capacity. To accomodate the increase in its force the company will build a hotel and a number of additional cottages at the mill.

PAT CROWE PAYS UP.

Senator A. W. Brewster, of St. Joseph, Mo., received on Saturday a draft for $250 sent to him by "Pat" Crowe from Johannesburg, South Africa, to pay an attorney fee. Crowe has been owing a number of years. Crowe's name has been connected by allegation with the kidnapping of the son of Edward Cudahy, the Omaha packer, who paid a ransom of $25,000 in gold. Several years ago Crowe was under arrest in St. Joseph on the charge of train robbery and employed Brewster to defend him. The charge was dismissed, as the case was not strong.

He Was Undoubtedly Guilty.

An old negro named Ephraim, having been sworn on the jury in a murder trial in one of the southern states, for some time stubbornly resisted a verdict of guilty for no other apparent reason than his aversion to capital punishment in general. HATCHING AN OSTRICH.

The Labor-Dividing Process of the Male and Female Birds.

Early in the year, just as spring dawns, a pair of ostriches will begin to build a nest, or rather to scrape one out of the ground. The male bird rests his breastbone on the ground and kicks the sand behind; when one side is sufficiently deep he turns around and operates in a like manner, until a round hole about three feet in diameter and one foot deep is the result of his exertions; occasionally he intimates to the female that help is desired and they take turns. The hen forthwith begins to lay an egg every day, until 12 or 15 are located side by side in this hole in the ground; they scatter a little sand over the eggs to protect them from the rays of the California sun; this habit has doubtless led to the supposition printed in many ancient natural histories that the eggs of the ostrich are hatched by the sun, unaided by the birds. As soon as the full number of eggs are laid, the couple share the labor of hatching; the male bird setting on the eggs from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until 5 o'clock the following morning; and it may be understood with what skill this is performed when it is remembered that 250 pounds of ostrich is bearing down upon 14 eggs; at 9 o'clock the hen takes his place. The male ostrich, however, with remarkable intelligence, relieves the female for an hour in the middle of the day while she goes in search of necessary nourishment. A pair will follow this regime with the greatest regularity for about 40 days, when the eggs are hatched.

The parliament of Vancouver has as its speaker a man who was once a coal miner in Northumberland.

When the Marriage Knot Was Real

Few of those who talk of the "marriage knot" realize that the knot was ever anything more than a mere figure of speech. Among the Babylonians trying the knot was part of the marriage ceremony. There the priest took a thread of the garment of the bride and another from that of the bridegroom and tied them into a knot, which he gave to the bride, thus symbolizing the binding nature of the union which now existed between herself and her husband.

IN THE SKIN OF A FRIEND

It Bound One of the Books of Astronomer Flammarion.

Queer legacies are not uncommon, as a glance over the records of any probate court will show; but the bequest of Mlle. B. to the French astronomer and novelist, Flammarion, is probably without a parallel.

Mlle. B. was the possessor of a wonderful complexion and a neck and shoulders which made her conspicuous at any function where decollete was required. Though not a member of the smart set, she moved in good society, and it was at a dinner party that Flammarion met her, and with the proverbial gallantry of his race warmly complimented her on her fair complexion, laying special stress on the beauty of her neck and shoulders. The girl was much gratified by his admiration, and the incident closed for the time being.

Some months later the author received a black-bordered envelope. It contained an announcement of the death of Mlle. B., and added that it was the young woman's wish that the skin of her neck and shoulders be preserved and sent to the author to be used by him as a binding for one of his works. Such is the story as it has been told on this side of the water. Prof. Barnard, the head of the astronomy department of the University of Chicago, determined while on a recent visit to Paris to sound Flammarion as to the truth of the story. Flammarion listened in silence while the interpreter went over the details, then with a quick "Pardon" he jumped from his seat and left the room. In a few minutes he returned with a volume seemingly bound in delicate calf. He laid it upon Bernard's knees. "Voila" (behold it), he said simply.

A Peculiar Industry.

As as instance of peculiar industrial occupations, it is said that dealers in second-hand bread have a pretty good trade all the year round in London. They collect fragments of bread from the restaurants and dust heaps, which they carefully sort into first and second quality. The former, being comparatively clean, is baked and then cut into dice for soup and made into raspings, which are bought up by the cookshops for garnishing. The second quality bread is sold for food for poultry and other domestic animals.

Laundering Thin Dresses.

To launder the exquisite creations of muslins and lace in which this season abounds has become quite a problem, yet the most delicate materials will not be injured if washed with Ivory Soap and dried in the shade. But little starch need be used.—ELIZA R. PARKER.

FOURTH OF JULY TRICKS.

A Few That Will Help You Celebrate the Day.

To make a well of fire, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, to 12 ounces of water in an earthenware basin add gradually 2 ounces of sulphuric acid. Then add to this, also gradually, about three-quarters of an ounce of granulated zinc. A rapid production of hydrogen gas will instantly take place. Then add from time to time a few small pieces of phosphorus. A multitude of gas bubbles will be produced, which will fire on the surface of the effervescing liquid. The whole surface of the liquid will become luminous, and fire balls, with jets of flame, will dart from the bottom through the fluid with great rapidity and a hissing noise.

To set a combustible body on fire by the contact of water, fill a saucer with water and let fall into it a piece of potassium of the size of a peppercorn. The potassium will instantly burst into flame, with a slight explosion, and burn vividly on the surface of the water, darting at the same time from one side of the vessel to the other with great violence in the form of a beautiful red-hot fireball.

For the experiment called animated fire put some small pieces of camphor in a basin of pure water. A very peculiar motion commences at once, some of the pieces turning as if on an axis, others go steadily round the vessel, some seem to be pursuing others, and thus they continue forming a curious and pleasing appearance. But if a single drop of sulphuric acid be put into the water the motion of the camphor stops instantly. If a piece of camphor is lighted and then carefully placed on the water, it burns with a bright flame, moving about with great rapidity, as if in search of something, but is instantly stopped by a drop of sulphuric acid.

An Independence Day Freak.

At a Fourth of July picnic were passed around to the company wooden plates of generous dinner plate size. On these were pasted various odd shaped pieces of red, white and blue paper. These, it was explained, were intended to represent in their general outline the maps of the 13 original states as they now appeared, and with them, to avoid the unlucky number, was also a map of Cuba. At the top of each, instead of its name, was printed a number. Pencils were distributed, and the guests were given half an hour to guess the identity of the maps, the names of which were to be written on the backs of the plates. The couple most successful in this were each presented with an immense cannon firecracker, which, however, was not as dangerous as it seemed at first sight, for it was nothing worse than a clever imitation of the real thing filled with bonbons.—Alice Carlotta Wheeler in Woman's Home Companion.

Where the Declaration Was Signed.

The 2d of July marked the adoption by congress of the resolution of independence, the sufficient legislative act. On the Fourth occurred the declaration itself. But not till the following 2d of August did the ceremony of signature take place, though this has furnished to the popular mind the common pictorial and dramatic conception of the event.—Buffalo Express.

Bonded a Chain.

A story is being told about a German who has a hotel far down town. An artist—one of those barroom artists who make pictures on mirrors with soap—called on the German the other day and asked for some work. "Well," the German said, "you might paint a brown bear on my sign. How much would you charge to do it?" "Two dollars," the artist answered. Thereupon the contract was made, and the bear was painted.

At the end of the job the artist said, "Don't you want me to paint a chain on the bear?" "Would you charge extra for that?" said the German. "Yes. That would cost $1 extra." "Then I can't afford to have it done." The artist departed. That night it rained, and, in the morning the bear had vanished from the sign! The rain had washed it away.

The German sent for the painter at once. "My bear," he said reproachfully, "is gone." The other answered, "Well, I wanted to put a chain on it, didn't I?" The German then handed out $3.62 for the painting of another bear, the third for a chain to make the picture permanent.

The chained bear now remains upon the sign impervious to the weather.—Philadelphia Record.

A Terrible Failure.

A well known Milwaukee lawyer with a weakness for long stories was a visitor at Madison "once upon a time," as the story books put it.

He saw upon the register of the Park hotel the name of Colonel Gabriel Bouck of Oshkosh and decided that he was in duty bound to call upon that Nestor of the Wisconsin bar, especially as they had both occupied the position of grand master of the grand lodge of Wisconsin Masons.

He called on Mr. Bouck in his room in the hotel and found the Oshkoshian in his shirt sleeves, yawning. He began on Masonry. First he gave his views of the brotherhood, from the building of Solomon's temple "without sound of tool or iron" down to date, and then he started in on the chapter. Finally, startled by an extra yawn, he broke off his story with:

"Well, Gabe, as I have been appointed trustee for the Asylum For the Deaf and Dumb I think I had better go to bed. I have to take an early train for Janesville."

"For land's sake! Is it possible that you are going to learn to talk with your hands too?" came the blunt reply from the old lawyer.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

...of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

Where the whole country is suffering, and so there is no especial kick due from this section, as it is for—that is during the night while our nights are pleasant and cool. In this respect we are fortunate and it proves Clanton to be an ideal summer resort. If we had a big, unscrupulous hotel I have no doubt but that Clanton would be crowded with visitors all during the summer. As it is, visitors are not come here because of lack of accommodation. Our boarding houses are good, but their capacity is limited. There is a good opening for A1 hotel.

In spite of the hot dry weather, I am rejoiced to learn from all sections in Chilton county that crops are looking fine, and a good yield is anticipated. Corn and cotton, especially, are said to be in excellent condition since the drouth was broken, and as we are now having an occasional shower there is every reason to hope for a good yield.

About two years ago the county sold their property, known as the Poor Farm, about thirteen miles from Clanton, for $800, arrangements being made with the purchaser to run the poor house until a new farm was secured. This week Judge Adams has bought 80 acres of land, five miles from Clanton, on Yellowleaf creek, with good house, etc., for $460, which saves the county with $340 on hand from the sale of the old property. This amount and the $700 realized from the sale of the lot in Clanton will be sufficient to thoroughly equip the poor house and farm, and will be of great advantage both to the county and the inmates. Being so easy of access to the county seat, the property will be more under the supervision of the county officers. It was a good stroke of business for the county, and the Judge deserves credit for it.

[illegible] Northington's store, in this county, was burglarized Monday, and [illegible] M. A. C. Smith [illegible] was a fair value. [illegible] was mostly [illegible] good indications [illegible] have faith in [illegible] Clanton. The two fires we have had this year has some good to [illegible], but development [illegible] vacant lot can be bought at a good fair price.

[illegible] has at last got [illegible] about eight years [illegible] Bowie was working on the [illegible] county, when in [illegible] hand car he was [illegible] for life in [illegible] brought against the company by Bowie won it and was awarded damages. The company appealed the case was again tried, again Bowie won. Another appeal was taken, and a third time a jury decided that he was entitled to $5000 damages. The company made one more attempt to have the case tried again, but the Supreme Court sustained the decision of the lower court and refused the application, and Bowie has got the cash. We hope he will safely invest the amount, and secure for himself a comfortable income for the balance of his days.

[illegible] is not a busier town of its size anywhere in the State of Alabama than Clanton. In all directions the sound of the hammer and saw is to be heard, and the musical clink of the mason's trowel adds to the harmony. Will Sartor's new store is roof high. Pinckard's addition is nearly complete. Mrs. Phillips has taken possession of her new premises and makes a pretty show of millinery. Kanter has moved into his new store which makes a very attractive appearance; C. L. Stewart's fittings are nearly finished, and the painters are working there and on Robinson's place. Mrs. Johnson has moved her dwelling house out of the block. The old store house vacated by W. Kanter is being converted into two storehouses, one side to be occupied by Judson Strock with books and stationery, and the other by J. E. Evans with general merchandise. We are all busy, you bet.

It is probable that the next few weeks will see several more new brick buildings started. Tipton Mullins will soon commence a two or three story brick building. Dick Edwards intends to build a one-story brick storehouse, and the Headley lot on the corner is being figured on for a two-story brick. T. A. Curry proposes to erect an office building opposite the court house, and A. C. Smith a two-story store house on the lot adjoining. On the lot bought from the county this week, A. C. Smith is considering the erection of three one-story store houses. Between W. L. Mullins and Wilson & Bro., the lot has been secured by the People's Savings Bank for the erection of the two-story bank building. Last, but by no means least, it is greatly to be hoped that the L. & N. will speedily rebuild the depot.

A greater feeling of security is experienced by the people of Clanton since Lee Hayes has been appointed night policeman. Vague and indefinite rumors were afloat as to what might happen. Whether there was any truth in them or not, one thing is certain, and that is a night policeman was a necessity. When Lee was sheriff, they say he kept the town in apple-pie order, and was a terror to evil-doers. If the improvement at night during the last week only continues I think everyone in town will congratulate the Mayor and Council on this appointment.

The Southern Normal Musical Institute commenced a session last Monday, with an enrolment of forty-five students which has since increased to sixty. Prof. Showalter and his accomplished daughter are thorough teachers whose hearts are in their work, and the session will undoubtedly prove a success in every way. As I listened to the melody last night I thought of Lorenzo in the "Merchant of Venice."

Here will we sit and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears; soft stillness and the night
Become the touches of sweet harmony.

I have found Dr. Moffett's TEETHINA a splendid remedy and aid for my teething children. When my oldest boy was a teething child, every succeeding day warned us that we would inevitably lose him. I happened upon TEETHINA, and began at once administering it to him, and his improvement was marked in 24 hours, and from that day on he recuperated. I have constantly kept it and used it since with my children, and have taken great pleasure in sounding its praises to all mothers of young children. I found it invaluable even after the teething period was passed.

Though our visiting capitalists were much pleased with us in many respects they decided to buy out Riderville and "we've missed the mill." We are reminded in this case of the "fox and sour grapes," we can now hold on to beautiful timbers and our world-famed health.

We regret to state that Mrs. Frank Dullose is quite ill. With the exception of colds we are holding our usual health record. Generous showers have broken the protracted drouth, and our good farmer friends whose spirits are often mercurial are up now. Almost everyone observed our touch of simoon the 12th. Your correspondent brought to mind the juvenile pictures of big trousered Turks and camels rooting in the sand until it had blown over. Had ours been so hot as our pictured ones death would have ensued since it blew about eight hours and would have smothered, it was only uncomfortable here but we read many died in heated cities. WANTON, - - - ALABAMA.

Now who will dare say that Chicago has no eyes for the beautiful. She is going to spend $25,000,000 to improve the looks of her lake front.

Question is raised as to the permanency of American humor. Why, when the jokes of mother-in-law and the boarding-house are enduring, world without end?

The recent Spanish election was attended by riots and murders. Considering how little an election in Spain really amounts to, it seems unreasonable to have so much difficulty over it.

At a recent apartment-house fire in New York City, a new life net, circular in form, 24 feet in diameter, held by six firemen, proved a valuable life-saving agent. Three persons jumped into the net from the sixth story of the building and 17 from the third story and all were saved uninjured. The appliance has a metal rim, to which the net is attached by springs.

Austria is planning a system of canals for internal transport as complete as that which is being developed in Germany. The plan calls for a continuous waterway from the North and Baltic seas to the Adriatic and the Black sea, to cost 750,000,000 crowns. It is proposed to begin work in 1904 and it will take 20 years to complete the system. The object of these canals is to increase the importance of Budapest and Fiume as centres of international traffic.

While in England no income tax is levied on incomes of less than $800, in Prussia, on the other hand, the limit of exemption is drawn at incomes of less than $225. Yet even with this only 8.46 percent of the population of Prussia are income taxpayers, over 91 percent having to live on less than $225 per annum. Again, the property of over $1500 capital value shows that only 14,000 individuals out of a total population of 32,000,000 possess property of over $175,000 value.

A new plan having for its object the distribution of young trees throughout the country will be put into practical operation next year by the secretary of agriculture. An investigation has been made to discover the varieties which will thrive best in the various localities, and the distribution will be made in a manner somewhat similar to that employed in the seed distribution authorized by Congress. Special attention will be given to trees of the nut-bearing, shade, and lawn variety, and oaks. Ash and lindens will also constitute a prominent portion of the distribution. The secretary believes that the idea will prove popular.

The death of "Gentleman Joe," tramp, musician, poet—some of whose verse had the note of genuine inspiration—and that of Skoog, the expert counterfeiter, who was of good family and posessed fine talents, are sad in that their perversion to evil seemed wholly uncontrollable. With such examples of life's failures the effort now being made by the school authorities to deal intelligently with abnormal children—the apparently incorrigibles, as well as the dull and deficient—seem worthy of encouragment. The mental twist if discovered in early youth might be treated like a bodily ill till health of mind may perhaps be finally restored. It is an experiment well worth trying, thinks the New York Herald.

At the present rate of the manufacture of spools and other articles of women's use, the immense white birch forests of Maine cannot last many years. Although the birch forests are extensive, the fact that 17 spool mills and a large number of so-called novelty mills are eating up the timber at a rate of from 35,000,000 to 40,000,000 feet annually excites the apprehension of foresters and manufacturers. The spool mills use about 30 cords of birch annually, turning out 800,000,000. Each spool is large enough to carry 200 yards of thread. The amount of thread that could be wound upon these spools would reach 3600 times around the equator and leave a little for mending. About as much spool wood is sent to Europe every year as is manufactured into spools in Maine. Last year Maine exported about 15,000,000 feet of spool bars, chiefly to Scotland, and of this quantity about one-half was shipped to Bangor. Several million feet of spool bars are also shipped to other parts of the United States where there are spool mills, notably those of Rhode Island.

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

Further Report of Alabama's Constitutional Convention.

Forty-Sixth Day.

Legislative Article Considered—Clerks Released—State Elections Every Four Years.

There were 120 delegates present this morning and 125 in the afternoon.

President Knox reported from the rules committee a resolution to take up the suffrage clause on Tuesday, July 23, and the same was adopted. Mr. Samford introduced a resolution to instruct the general assembly to reduce the tag tax on fertilizers to not exceeding 10 cents a ton.

Considerable time was spent in an effort to reconsider the inspection of banks by state officials but it failed.

The report of the committee on legislative department then came up and three sections were adopted. They provide for a state senate and a house of representatives, change the style "general assembly" to "legislature," define the wording of laws, place the date of state elections on same day as federal elections and fix the terms of senators and representatives at four years and the session of the legislature every four years.

All but five clerks of committees were dispensed with.

In the afternoon the preamble and declaration of rights was read the third time and adopted by 116 to 2.

Sections 4 and 5 of the legislative article were adopted. They provide the ages of members of the legislature.

Forty-Seventh Day.

Judiciary System Outlined—A Few Changes—35 Senators and 105 Representatives.

One hundred and eighteen and 114 were the attendance at today's sessions of the constitutional convention.

An effort was made to reconsider the vote by which it was decided to hold quadrennial sessions of the legislature, but it failed. The committee on judiciary submitted its report. No radical change in the present system is recommended, but it is made more elastic. The legislature is authorized to create an intermediate appellate court, and to consolidate law and equity in the same court. The limitation on the number of judicial circuits is removed and the jurisdiction of justices of the peace is changed. The governor may fill temporary vacancies in the judgeships and the term of the supreme court judges is left at six years: solicitors to be elected by the people, and the general assembly may abolish courts of chancery.

Minority reports were filed to certain sections. The free pass matter also provoked much discussion. The number of senators was fixed at 35 and of representatives at 105.

Forty-Eighth Day.

Mr. Watts Speaks Against Negro Office Holding—A New County Proposed—Twelve Sections Adopted.

The attendance today was 106 and 85.

Mr. Cornwell introduced an ordinance to create a new county, Houston, out of Jefferson, with Bessemer as the county seat, area 435 square miles.

Mr. Davis suggested that after July 20th the convention meet at Bellview Hotel near Chattanooga.

Mr. Howell introduced a resolution to give thanks to the divine power for the rain which has blessed the country. The resolution was adopted.

A new measure introduced provides that the legislature may impose an inheritance tax of 2½ per cent on every $100 of property inherited or conveyed to persons other than parents, brothers and sisters and children.

The convention then took up the article on legislation and adopted 12 more sections. Section 17 created some discussion and called a speech from Mr. Watts. He offered an amendment providing that no negro shall hold office in the state. Decision on the amendment was deferred. The afternoon session was devoted strictly to business. Congressman Bankhead was tendered the courtesy of the convention floor. Adjourned while discussing section 29.

Forty-Ninth Day.

Convention Session Extended Indefinitely—Delegates' Pay Continues, Too—More Sections Adopted.

Roll call today was answered by 110 delegates this morning and 109 in the evening.

The convention reconsidered and rejected section 27 of the legislative article, and provided that the legislature could not appropriate more money in any year than the estimated income of the state—this estimate to be furnished by the governor and auditor. The articles on local legislation, banks and banking and state and county boundaries were read for the third time and adopted.

By a vote of 108 to 13 the convention extended its own time indefinitely. Messrs. Beddow, Lowe, O'Neill, White, Burns, Cobb, Cofer, Fosher, Jones, Kirk, Kirkland, Robinson and Spragins, voting that the delegates work without pay after the fiftieth day. Sections 27, and 30 to 37 of the legislative article were adopted.

Fiftieth Day.

Ex-Gov. Jones Causes Sensation—Drew A Knife—A Love-feast Follows—Militia Committee Report.

What might have been the final day of the convention session was attended by 94 delegates. A few new measures were introduced. Judge Robinson offered a resolution that the convention stand adjourned at 6 o'clock today. This resolution was voted down by a large majority. Mr. Burns offered a resolution that the convention's expenses were more than necessary. Judge Coleman offered an ordinance to prohibit railroads from granting or selling passes to legislators or state officials at lower rate than to the public, and making it a misdemeanor to accept such a pass. Judges were required to give this ordinance in charge to the grand jury. Mr. Freeman offered an ordinance that no corporation attorney be eligible to the legislature.

The committee on militia reported an article whose only change from the present one is to restrict the militia to white male citizens between 18 and 45 years and giving the legislature authority to organize naval militia.

The committee on journal reported it correct and ex-Governor Jones moved that parts of it be stricken out. A parliamentary wrangle ensued and finally the president ordered the sergeant-at-arms to remove ex-Governor Jones from the floor. Gov. Jones drew his knife and said: "If the sergeant-at-arms or anybody else tries to make me take my seat, when as a member of this convention I have a right to take an appeal, why he only does it over my dead body." A little later the gentleman explained.

The convention resumed the legislative article discussion and five more sections were adopted.

Adjourned until Monday, July 29.

Fifty-first Day.

A Dry Session—But Twenty-two Sections of the Legislative Article Were Adopted.

Only 80 delegates were present this morning and eight more in the afternoon.

The article on the legislative was resumed and sections 42 to 64, except section 60, were adopted. Section 60 was stricken out. It referred to county seats and the matter is covered in another article.

Gen Chaffee has issued a circular, in which he explicitly defines the status and duties of army officers with respect to their relations with the provincial and other civil governments. It is expected this circular will settle minor misunderstandings between the two departments and prevent possible conflicts of authority.

A British officer home from South Africa declares it an utter impossibility to catch Generals Botha and Dewet because the British officers are Free Masons. He says the Boers may surrender, but the leaders will never be caught while Kitchener and other Masons lead the British.

IN consequence of the Boer raids into Natal and the support given the raiders by republicans, Great Britain has ordered all white men to evacuate all farms between the Tugela and Sundays rivers.

A PLOW in Albemarle county Va., unearthed the other day a mussel shell, on the inner side of which, covered with pearl, were eleven small metal images of Buddha.

FLORIDA has leased to the government for forty years her quarantine stations which will be operated by the marine hospital service.

CARLISLE D. Graham has made his fifth successful trip through the Niagara whirlpool rapids in his barrel.

A DISPATCH says Mrs. Paul Kruger died Saturday in Pretoria.

A marked and extensive revival of interest in croquet has taken place in Great Britain, and it will probably extend to the United States. Popular fancies for various kinds of sport often show odd reversals and caprices, but croquet has merits which should prevent its falling into disfavor.

The movement to inculcate in children ideas of kindness toward animals has reached South Dakota. The State has now passed a law enjoining the teaching of such principles in the schools, and forbidding experiments upon live animals.

People give more time to recreation than they did years ago, and the world is the better for it. Occasional outings, railroad journeys, visits to interesting points, both at home and abroad, have greatly swollen the tide of travel.

IN AND AROUND ALABAMA

THE NOTED CAPT. JASPER JONES PLACE BURNED.

COL. B. F. SAWYER DIES IN ATLANTA

Alabama's Revenue Business—The Oil Fever Continues to Spread—Ben de Lemos Goes to Prison—A Pair of Shooting Scrapes.

COL. SAWYER DEAD.

Col. B. F. Sawyer, journalist, inventor and distinguished veteran, died in Atlanta July 19, at the age of 63. Colonel Sawyer was colonel of the Twenty-fourth Alabama in the war between the states. He was the inventor of the square-bottomed paper bag, of a type setting machine and claimed the invention of a printing press now in general use by large newspapers. He was the editor at different times of two papers in Rome, Ga., and of the Atlanta Commonwealth, which ceased publication many years ago. Colonel Sawyer resided at Oxford, Ala., for a number of years and took a prominent part in the discussion of public questions, contributing articles on public issues to the leading papers of the state. It was at Anniston that he invented the typesetting machine which is now manufactured in Washington. He removed to Atlanta about eight or nine years ago. He was buried at Oxford.

FOLLOWED BY FATE.

The large two-story house built by Capt. Jasper Jones at Scottsboro, back in the seventies was burned to the ground Tuesday. The property was owned by Wiley Whitfield and was one the best built houses in the county. At the time it was built Capt. Jasper Jones was register in chancery of Jackson county. It was to this pretty home that he expected to take his young wife when he was murdered in the very home he had built and looked forward to with pleasure to living in. A carpenter in his employ by the name of Franks fell out about a settlement and shot and killed him instantly. Franks made his escape into the mountains but was subsequently captured near Winchester, Tenn. He was tried, and after dragging through the courts for a number of years he was acquitted. Fire closes the last silent witness of the Jones tragedy.

REVENUE RECEIPTS.

It is estimated that the internal revenue receipts of Alabama for the present month, the first of the new fiscal year, will be $80,000. This would show a falling off of but $5,000, despite the cutting down in revenues which took place July 1.

The falling off in the sale of revenue stamps for July will probably amount to $10,000, but in other respects increases of about $5,000 will be shown, making the total decrease only about $5,000.

The indications are, judging from the receipts up to date, that there will be a falling off in stamp sales amounting to about $100,000 for the year, but receipts from other sources, which show a steady increase, will go a long ...ys toward overcoming this.

THEY'RE AFTER OIL.

Another oil company has been organized at Huntsville, in addition to the several already in existence in that place. The latest one is known as the Madison Oil Company, and the authorized capital is said to be $250,000.

GOT A LIFE SENTENCE.

The trial of Oscar Mann at Mobile, charged with the murder of Claude Norden, has come to an end, the jury returning the verdict of guilty, and fixing the punishment at life imprisonment. The trial occupied four days and aroused a great deal of interest. The defendant's mother and brothers were with him throughout the trial, and were visibly affected when they saw that all hope of an acquittal was gone. The mother of the condemned man was almost prostrate with grief when the verdict was read. The prisoner, however, appeared indifferent.

CAUGHT IN DEMOPOLIS.

Word is received by the sheriff of Jefferson county from H. A. Monnier, city marshal of Demopolis, stating that John Hall, alias Shack Hall, alias Shack Ward, had been arrested by him. The man of aliases is wanted by the authorities of Bessemer on a charge of murder. He is charged with having killed a negro at the latter place.

FROM STATE HOUSE TO PRISON

Hon. Ben de Lemos, a former representative from Lowndes county, has been sentenced to the United States penitentiary at Columbus, O., for five years for pension forgery. His life has been a very checkered one. At one time he was a tramp and as such arrived at Montgomery. He had no place to sleep and crept into the state house. The cushion of the speaker's chair was tempting and he curled up and slept there all night. As a remarkable sequence of that night, de Lemos had been elected to the legislature of Alabama, and was entitled to a seat in the chair in which he had slept.

FATAL SHOOTING AT ATHENS.

Sunday afternoon, July 14, near Athens, Frank Jenkins was shot and mortally wounded by Walter Wigginton. Jenkins had terrorized the community for some time and recently was charged with slander and, had but recently been liberated under a heavy bond, and had threatened to kill every witness against him. Three men surrounded Wigginton and demanded a retraction. He refused to make it and shot, killing Jenkins and wounding another of the trio. No one appeared against Wiggington at his preliminary trial and he was released.

LAUDERDALE'S FAIR.

The Lauderdale Fair Association has announced dates for September 25-28 in order to get in the racing circuit with Columbia, Jackson, Murfresboro, Tenn., and other Kentucky towns. The management will hang up $1,000 in cash prizes and the horsemen who are in the circuit guarantee a string of thirty-five race horses. The management promise first-class racing and other attractions, and will make an effort to surpass other years in the success and attendance of the fair.

CAUGHT A MOONSHINER.

Dock Rogers, a noted moonshiner, was captured by Marshal Arnold near Section, on Sand Mountain, early in the week. He broke jail several weeks ago, where he was confined, under indictment for making wildcat whisky, and a reward was offered for him. Rogers makes his boast that no jail can hold him. He has made his escape three times.

A PECULIAR FATALITY.

Dallas A. Jones, a planter of Lauderdale county, while crossing the Tennessee river on a mule a few days ago, met with what later proved a fatal accident. He was holding an umbrella over his head, when the mule shied and threw him into the shallow water. A rib of the umbrella was driven into his eye and several inches into his head.

IN SELF DEFENSE.

Lee McGimpsey, white, shot and killed a man named Rakatz in Birmingham Monday. It is stated that McGimpsey was being approached by his adversary with a pistol and that McGimpsey shot first.

CONCENTRATED.

The Gadsden plant of the Centra Foundry Co., will be moved to Bessemer and added to the plant there. The combination will give employment to 300 men.

General Davis has been ordered to the command of the American troops on the Island of Mindanao. General Kobbe, formerly commander of this district, will return to the United States.

RAILROAD EXTENSION.

J. T. Cochrane, president of the Carrollton Short Line, is engaged in promoting an extension of his railway to the Tombigbee. The extension will be about 16 miles, and will pass through some of Alabama's finest lands. Several Chicago capitalists are interested.

CLAUDE McBride and Will Howard, two white men of Girard, Russell county, engaged in a hand-to-hand fight with knives Wednesday afternoon, in a saloon. McBride was severely cut. The men refuse to give any reason for the trouble.

COLONEL A. A. Wiley, of Montgomery, has been notified that his son, Captain Noble Wiley, has been designated for examination before the United States Army Board at Fortress Monroe, Va., with a view to being appointed to a lieutenancy in the regular army. Captain Wiley is commander of the M...gomery Mounted Rifles.

THE Bank of Ensley has increased its stock from $50,000 to $100,000.

OUR CORRESPONDENT'S WEEKLY LETTER

Commissioner Rockhill Reports from China — Admiral Schley in Naval History — Moro Castle to be Fortified — Allen Comes Home.

The United States Civil Commission has announced that after three months' trial of a provincial form of government in the Philippine islands of Cebu and Bohl and the provinces of Batangas, Luzon, control of these districts owing to their incomplete pacification has been returned to the military authorities, it having been found that the communities are backward and underving of civil administration. Secretary Root is quoted as saying: "Civil government is yet an experimental stage in the Philippines. I am the pale that the military power will be frequently called upon to supercede the civil government in portions of the islands for some time to come."

"The diplomatic corps in Pekin is considering the Russian proposals for a commercial increase of the Chinese customs. A solution of the problem is hoped for. The indemnity fixed at 450,000,000 taels with 4 per cent interest has been formally accepted, and Japan has waived preferential treatment. The formal surrender of Pekin to the Chinese authorities is expected to take place on August 14, the anniversary of the relief of the legationers by the international forces. The Russian proposal is understood to be an increase from 5 to 10 per cent of the customs duties which the Chinese government will collect from imports of foreign countries."

Naval circles are excited over the third volume of Maclay's "History of the United States Navy," which is used as a text book in the naval academy. The first two volumes of the history are credited with being accurate, the third volume, however, has been made the vehicle for the presentation of all the stories derogatory to Admiral Schley. Secretary Long has ruled out the third volume till the objectionable language is corrected.

It is the intention to occupy, control and defend Moro Castle, overlooking the harbor of Havana, with United States troops after the government of the island has been turned over to the Cubans. The plan is to equip the fortress with modern artillery that Cuba may be assisted in defending herself against outside interference, and also that the United States may have guarantee against failure on the part of the Cuban government to carry out its pledges in the terms of the treaty now in course of preparation as between this country and Cuba. Under this treaty the retention of the fort is provided for.

Aguinaldo is irritated at his continued surveillance by the American authorities. Whenever he signs his name he must add the word "prisoner." He has refused the request of his friends to write the insurgent general Malvar advising him to surrender and signed a copy of his oath with the understanding that it would be forwarded to Malvar with the purpose of influencing his surrender, but he put his signature to this oath he was a "prisoner in Malacan prison."

Commissioner Rockhill has presented the state department with the following statement:

Alabama appointments of interest are these: By order of the secretary of war Contract Dental Surgeon William H. Chambers is ordered from Montgomery to Fortress Monroe and to report in person to the commanding officer of that post for duty. First Lieutenant Henry M. Bankhead, Thirtieth Infantry, is transferred to the Twentieth Infantry, in which he originally served. Lieutenant Bankhead is a son of Representative Bankhead and has a good record.

A company which operated electric cabs in Paris, France, has withdrawn them from service, a year's experience having demonstrated to them that the cost of operation was about double the receipts.

The Philosopher of Bartow Writes Interestingly About Ancient Mythology.

MORAL LESSONS FROM ANCIENT TALES

Throws Into Old Traditions of Past Ages and Draws Some Interesting Conclusions Therefrom.

In all ages mankind has felt the need of a God. There is a feeling of helplessness in our nature and if man can't find a God he will make one. It is curious how strangely similar are all the pagan mythologies to the Bible religion. St. John says: "And there was war in heaven and Michael and his angels fought against the dragon and his angels and hurled them down. That great dragon which is the devil, was cast down into the earth." Just so the Greek and Roman and Scandinavian mythology there was war in the heaven and the good deities prevailed and the evil were cast out, but not forever. Jupiter had war with the Titans and conquered them. Odin, the Norse god, was called, had war with the giants and conquered him and gave his son Heimdal for his kingdom. The Arabians had a serpent to tempt the man and woman of their creation, figure of the devil, and this serpent was ever gnawing at the roots of the tree of life—a tree that grew in a spring and was kept in perpetual motion by the water of the spring. This spring was at one end of the rainbow and the home of Woden and the gods was at the other end, and as often as the rainbow appeared Bifrost, the giant, made use of it to build a bridge over which they went to the spring to drink and renew their youth and hold their high court and sit in judgment upon offenders. Just so our religion tells us of the tree of life and the water of life and the leaves of the tree which are for the healing of the nations.

The Scandinavian mythology was a beautiful and fascinating religion and the Norsemen believing the Danes and Swedes believed in it as piously as we believe in our Bible and Christianity. Indeed it took centuries to overcome it and Christianity there. For centuries it held sway over all Germany and even to this day all Christendom uses the names of the days of the week that came down from the Norsemen. For Wednesday was Woden's day and Thursday was Thorsday. Thor was Woden's son and was the god of the clouds. When he wished to make it thunder and shake the rain out of the heavens he took two great mountains one in each hand, and clapped them together. Friday was Frygadag. Frya was Woden's wife. Just so we got the names of the months from Roman mythology and we got the constellations in the heavens from the Egyptian mythology and it remains unchanged to this day. But I wish the young people to know and remember that in all mythologies their religion was founded upon a faith that truth and justice and virtue must prevail over evil. The good were rewarded and the evil were punished, not only in this world but in the world to come. The difference is that our religion is founded upon love and mercy rather than justice and we have but one God instead of a council.

Now it seems that Jupiter and his brothers, Pluto and Neptune, after they had whipped the Titans, proceeded at once to divide their great domain. Jupiter was the eldest and smartest and so he gave the seas to Neptune and hades to Pluto and kept heaven for himself. Smart, wasn't he? Hades was not hell at that time. The souls of the dead, both good and bad, mingled together in hades until Pluto concluded to separate the unrepentant and incurable ones for fear they would decoy his kingdom, and so he established a place and called it Tartarus and shut up all the hardest cases therein.

Now Pluto married a daughter of Ceres and she had a son named Plutus. He was the god of wealth and that is where the aristocracy came from. Our millionaires belong to it. So it means that the god of money is brother in law to the god of hell. Pretty close kin and dangerous, but it is according to scripture, for it says that "the love of money is the root of all evil," and "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to get to heaven." Now this Pluto began giving his riches to the dead, but he didn't like that and so he married so that he could receive a woman from another, and so he drives his way about slowly till he gets a man. Then he gives him a piece of money and suddenly opens his way and does away.

That too is symbolic of what scripture says. Riches take wings and fly away.

The love of money seems to have been accursed in all ages. The wedge of gold not only cursed Achan, but afflicted all Israel. Milton says that Mammon was one of heaven's gods—"one of the spirits that fell. His looks and thoughts were always downward bent, while he admired the golden pavements in heaven's streets and never looked up to aught divine. Then he no wonder that riches grow in hell. It is the soil that best deserves the precious bane."

No wonder, then, that Mr. Carnegie became alarmed and hurried to discharge. What a world of care he is now going through in distributing his wealth. He receives thousands of pleading letters, I know, for many have been sent to me to be forwarded to him—many piteous appeals for a little charity. Of course, I forward them and that is the last of it. They are perhaps read by proxy and then destroyed. Dr. Samuel Johnston wrote truly when he said, "Riches fortify a man against but one of the ills of life and that is poverty." Cresus had no monument. I know of one that was erected to a very rich bad man—an old bachelor—and his executor, a man of unflinching integrity, had chiseled in the marble these words: "He began the world a poor boy and died a citizen of large estate. This is his best eulogy."

He might as well have never lived and doubtless would be better off now. How many of the rich deserve a similar eulogy on their tombstones. Old Agur's prayer was a safe one—"Give me neither poverty nor riches." These great accumulations impoverish somebody. They generally come from the sweat and toil of the poor. Carnegie, The New York Herald says, was worth not less than $500,000,000, and no doubt is the richest man living or that ever lived. According to human laws and human morals, his wealth war honestly earned, more honestly than that of most millionaires, but in the sight of heaven he wronged his fellow men. No good. Christian man can ever become a millionaire except by inheritance. He can't earn it, and comply with the scripture, which says, "Do justly, love mercy and obey the Lord thy God."

But the poets and preachers and philosophers have from time immemorial written and spoken enough on this subject to encourage the liberal and alarm the greedy, and yet most all of our rich men are struggling for more. The Peabodys and Peter Coopers are rare exceptions in philanthropy.

Yesterday I received from a friend a late copy of The New York Sun, in which a whole page was devoted to a review of "Maclay's History of the United States Navy," which has just been published in three volumes by the Appletons. I read with deep interest all about the destruction of the Maine and the fight at Santiago, when suddenly I came to a merciless, scathing criticism of Commodore Schley, which made me not and fatigued my indignation. I had thought that whole controversy was settled and partially harmonized, but this will cause it to break out afresh, for The Sun lavishly indorses all that Maclay writes. He tells what Admiral Philip told him about Schley's disgraceful conduct (Philip is dead now), and that he actually turned tail and ran away from the fight, and that his contribution to naval strategy throughout the campaign was "Avoid your enemy as long as possible, and if he makes for you, run!" Hobson is not mentioned in this review. Who is this Maclay, anyhow? But today I am comforted, for I have been eagerly perusing Dr. Curry's last and best book, "The Civil History of the Confederate States," published by B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond. It is a small book; a calm, considerate review of the past and full of his personal reminiscences—his contact and communion with our noble men—Davis, Toombs, Stephens, Ben Hill, Howell Cobb, Longstreet, Judah Benjamin and others. It is almost an autobiography. It does not seem to be a schoolbook, but I wish that every young man in the land would read it. It would take but a few hours and establish him in the faith—the true faith—the faith of our fathers. Dr. Curry is now almost alone. All his contemporaries who figured in the scenes he has narrated are dead. All but one—Judge Cabell still lives. How fortunate we are that the good doctor lived to write this book, for what he writes is respected at home and abroad. He has long moved in an atmosphere far above envy or malice or distraction. Long may he yet live.—Bill Arp, in Atlanta Constitution.

In his address as retiring President of the Iowa Academy of Sciences, published in Science, Professor W. H. Norton gives a timely and interesting resume of the various social services rendered by science. Near the end of the address occurs the following passage: "Thus has science been an accelerating force in the evolution of society. Increasing food supply by means of scientific agriculture, lengthening life by the repression of diseases, and introducing a thousand new means of livelihood, it has made possible the extraordinary recent growth of civilized nations. It permits the population of Europe to more than double since 1800, and enables England, which in the seventeenth century men thought too small for its scanty population, to support more than 38,000,000 people in comparative comfort. It lends some encouragement to the sanguine prophecy of Albert Bushnell Hart that the Mississippi Valley will sooner or later contain a population of 350,000,000."

Childhood is a strange marvel, of shallow deeps and deepest shallows. It is likely to contradict itself. Only time tells. Modern parents may find lessons for their own profit in the embittered youth of Hume and of Byron, the tragedy of sensitiveness in Chatterton's early trials and in the loveless years that have molded the thoughts of many of England's later thinkers to gloom.

TELEPHONE EAVESDROPPING.

How a Man Was Caught While Listening to His Neighbors.

It is a common failing of human nature to take too much interest in other people's affairs, and curiosity sometimes extends so far that one person will listen to a conversation between two others when they are all on the same telephone line. The growing use of the telephone in the rural districts opens the way to a new form of eavesdropping. It is difficult to indulge in this practice without detection, however. "The Electrical Review" tells the following story:

A man in Ohio has been made by his neighbors to pay a fine of $25 for eavesdropping over the telephone. Some time ago the farmers of a certain town organized a telephone company and installed their instruments on the party principle, by which arrangement all the bells on the circuit ring when a call is made. After a while the subscribers became aware that some one listened to their telephonic conversations, and they determined to find out who the eavesdropper was. It was, however, entirely by accident that the culprit was discovered. One afternoon a week or two ago two of the farmers were talking over the line, when the unmistakable sound of a transmitter being removed from its hook reached them. Instantly they ceased their conversation, and in the momentary silence that followed both distinctly heard the sharp, clear clime of a clock striking the hour. The clock in question had a chime whose peculiar tone when struck was familiar to both men, who at once knew who the listener was.

A New War on Rag-Time.

It is a well-witnessed phenomenon that in the rarefied atmosphere about Denver, Col., mountains and other large natural objects seem to the unaccustomed eye to be much nearer than they are. Presumably it is such unwonted clearness of vision which has led the American Federation of Music to think it sees the finish of the ragtime melody. For the federation sits at Denver this season, and it is there that the delegates have resolved to do all in their power to suppress "such musical trash."

Now, the veriest layman knows that the "rag" effort in its worst and most prevalent state is indeed a mere tatter of melody. But he also knows, especially if he lives amid clusters of New York pianos, hand-organs and summer garden orchestras, that the fascinating spell of syncopation is fast upon the land, that it shows no signs of abatement and that he talks of a large contract who speaks here of suppression.

Anti-rag-time crusades have been threatened before, but classicists have laid down their weapons on a showing that serious composers have mingled syncopations of accented notes with the scores of grand opera and oratorio. Dr. Dvorak, too, has cast the mantle of an American symphony about the questioned motif, and made it seem that one who attacks rag-time assails a national inspiration.

Nevertheless, let us hve a faint hope even with so far a cry as that from Denver. Our popular tunes may yet come from another than the remnant shelf.—New York World.

A Versatile Clergyman.

In an English town a clergyman has instituted a novel method of raising church funds. In a letter to the churches of the neighborhood he offers to do their spring cleaning with the announcement; "I can beeswax, polish or varnish floors with out one, and my wife is A1 at painting and decorating."

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

DISCOURSE BY THE EMINENT DIVINE LAST SUNDAY.

Subject: The Folly of Extravagance—Causes of the Great Financial Disturbances Which Take Place Every Few Years—Wasted Wealth.

(Copyright 1898.)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In this discourse Dr. Talmage shows the causes of the great financial disturbances which take place every few years, and arraigns the people who live beyond their means; text, Jeremiah xvii, 11, "As the partridge sitteth on eggs and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches and not by right shall leave them in the midst of his days and at his end shall be a fool."

Allusion is here made to a well-known fact in natural history. If a partridge or a quail or a robin brood the eggs of another species, the young will not stay with the one that happened to brood them, but at the first opportunity will assort with their own species. Those of us who have been brought up in the country have seen the dismay of the farmyard hen, having brooded aquatic fowls, when after awhile they tumble into their natural element, the water. So my text suggests that a man may gather under his wings the property of others, but it will after awhile escape; it will leave the man in a sorry predicament and make him feel very silly.

What has caused all the black days of financial disasters for the last sixty years? Some say it is the credit system. Something back of that. Some say it is the spirit of gambling ever and anon becoming epidemic. Something back of that. Some say it is the sudden shrinkage in the value of securities, which even the most honest and intelligent men could not have foreseen. Something back of that. I will give you the primal cause of all these disturbances. It is the extravagance of modern society which impels a man to spend more money than he can honestly make, and he goes into wild speculation in order to get the means for inordinate display, and sometimes the man is to blame and sometimes his wife, and oftenep both. Five thousand dollars income, $10,000, $20,000 income is not enough for a man to keep up the style of living he proposes, and therefore he steers his bark toward the maelstrom. Other men have suddenly snatched up $50,000 or $100,000—why not he? The present income of the man not being large enough, he must move earth and hell to catch up with his neighbors. Others have a country seat—so must he; others have an extravagant caterer—so must he; others have a palatial residence—so must he.

Extravagance is the cause of all the defalcations of the last sixty years, and if you will go through the history of all the great panics and the great financial disturbances no sooner have you found the story than right back of it you will find the story of how many horses the man had, how many carriages the man had, how many residences in the country the man had, how many banquets the man gave—always, and not one exception for the last sixty years, either directly or indirectly extravagance the cause.

Now, for the elegances and the refinements and the decorations of life I cast my vote. While I am considering this subject a basket of flowers is handed in—flowers paradisaical in their beauty—white calla, with a green background of begonia; a cluster of heliotropes nestling in some geraniums; sepal and perianth bearing on them the marks of God's finger. When I see that basket of flowers, they persuade me that God loves beauty and adornment and decoration. God might have made the earth so as to supply the gross demands of sense, but left it without adornment or attraction. Instead of the variegated colors of the seasons, the earth might have worn an unchanging dull brown. The tree might have put forth its fruit without the prophecy of leaf or blossom. Niagara might have come down in gradual descent without thunder and winged spray.

Look out of your window any morning after there has been a dew and see whether God loves jewels. Put a crystal of snow under a microscope and see what God thinks of architecture. God commanded the priest of olden time to have his robe adorned with a wreath of gold and the hem of his garment to be embroidered in pomegranates. The earth sleeps, and God blankets it with the brilliants of the night sky. The world wakes, and God washes it from the burnished laver of the sunrise. So I have not much patience with a man who talks as though decoration and adornment and the elegances of life are a sin when they are divinely recommended. But there is a line to be drawn between adornment and decoration that we can afford and those we cannot afford, and when a man crosses that line he becomes culpable. I cannot tell you what is extravagant for you. You cannot tell me what is extravagant for me. What is right for a queen may be squandering for a duchess. What may be economical for you, a man with larger income, will be wicked waste for me, with smaller income. There is no iron rule on this subject. Every man before God on his knees must judge what is extravagance, and when a man goes into expenditures beyond his means he is extravagant. When a man buys anything he cannot pay for, he is extravagant.

There are families in all our cities who can hardly pay their rent, and who owe all the merchants in the neighborhood and yet have an apparel unfit for their circumstances, and are all the time sailing so near shore that business misfortune or an attack of sickness prepares them for pauperism. You know very well there are thousands of families in our great cities who stay in neighborhoods until they have exhausted all their capacity to get trusted. They stay in the neighborhoods until the druggists will let them have no more medicines, and the butchers will sell them no more meat, and the bakers will sell them no more bread, and the groceryman will sell them no more sugar. Then they find the region unhealthy, and they hire a carman, whom they never pay, to take them to some new quarters, where the merchants, the druggists, the butchers, the bakers and the grocerymen come and give them the best rounds of beef and the best merchandise of all sorts until they find out that the only compensation they are going to get is the acquaintance of the patrons. There are thousands of such thieves in all our big cities. You see, I call them by the right name, for a if a man buys anything he does not mean to pay for he is a thief.

Of course sometimes men are flung of misfortunes, and they cannot pay. I know men who are just as honest in having failed as other men are honest in succeeding. I suppose there is hardly a man who has gone through life but there have been some times when he has been so hurt of misfortune he could not meet his obligations. But all that I put aside. There are a multitude of people who buy that which they never intend to pay for, for which there is no reasonable expectation they will ever be able to pay. Now, if you have become oblivious of honesty and mean to defraud, why not save the merchant as much as you can? Why not go some day to his store and when nobody is looking just shoulder the ham or the spare rib and in modest silence steal away?

That would be less criminal, because in the other way you take not only the man's goods, but you take the time of the merchant and the time of his accountant, and you take the time of the messenger who brought you the goods. Now, if you must steal, steal in a way to do as little damage to the trader as possible.

John Randolph, aroused in the American Senate when a question of national finance was being discussed, and, stretching himself to his full height, in a shrill voice he cried out: "Mr. Chairman, I have discovered the philosopher's stone, which turns everything into gold—pay as you go." Society has got to be reconstructed on this subject or the seasons of defalcation will continue to repeat themselves.

You have no right to ride in a carriage for which you are hopelessly in debt to the wheelwright who furnished the landau and to the horse dealer who provided the blooded span, and to the harness maker who emparadised the gay steeds, and to the liveryman who has provided the stabling, and to the driver who, with rosetted hat, sits on the coach box.

Oh, I am so glad it is not the absolute necessities of life which send people out into dishonesties and fling them into misfortunes. It is almost always the superfluities. God has promised us a house, but not a palace; raiment, but not chinchilla; food, but not canvasback duck. I am yet to see one of these great defalcations which is not connected in some way with extravagance.

While once in awhile a Henry Irving or an Edwin Booth or a Joseph Jefferson thrills a great audience with tragedy, you know as well as I do that the vast majority of the theatres are as debased as debased they can be, as unclean as unclean they can be and as damnable as damnable they can be. Three million dollars—the vast majority of those dollars going in the wrong direction.

Over a hundred millions paid in this country for cigars and tobacco a year! About $2,000,000,000 paid for strong drink in one year in this country! With such extravagance, pernicious extravagance, can there be any permanent prosperity? Business men, cool headed business men, is such a thing a possibility? These extravagances also account, as I have already hinted, for the positive crimes, the forgeries, the absconding of the officers of the banks. The store on the business street swamped by the residence on the fashionable avenue. The father's, the husband's craft capsized by carrying too much domestic sail. That is what springs the leak in the merchant's money till. That is what cracks the pistols of the suicides. That is what tears down the banks. That is what stops insurance companies. That is what halts this nation again and again in its triumphal march of prosperity. In the presence of the American people, so far as I can get their attention, I want to arraign this monster curse of extravagance, and I want you to pelt it with your scorn and hurl at it your anathema.

I know it cuts close. I did not know but some of you in high dudgeon would get up and go out. You stand it well. Some of you make a great swash in life, and after awhile you will die, and ministers will be sent for to come and stand by your coffin and lie about your excellences, but they will not come. If you send for me, I will tell you what my text will be: "He that provideth not for his own, and especially for those in his own household, is worse than an infidel!"

What an apportionment! Twenty thousand dollars for ourselves and one cent for God! Ah, my friends, this extravagance accounts for a great deal of what the cause of God suffers!

And the desecration goes on even to the funeral day. You know very well that there are men who die solvent, but the expenses are so great before they get under ground they are insolvent.

There are families that go into penury in wicked response to the demands of this day. They put in casket and tombstone that which they ought to put in bread. They wanted bread; you gave them a tombstone.

One would think that the last two obligations people would be particular about would be the physician and the undertaker. Because they are the two last obligations, those two professions are almost always cheated. They send for the doctor in great haste, and he must come day and night. They send for the undertaker amid the great solemnities, and often these two men are the very last to be met with compensation. Merchants sell goods, and the goods are not paid for. They take back the goods, I am told. But there is no relief in this case. The man spent all he had in luxury and extravagance while he lived, and then he goes out of the world, and has left nothing for his family, nothing for the obsequies, and as he goes out of the world he steals the doctor's pills and the undertaker's slippers. I was reading in a New York paper an account of the obsequies in a family of very moderate estate, and the aggregate was $3000. A man in New York of moderate estate dies. He has lived in extreme luxury. He departs this life. The family, desirous of keeping up the magnificence, orders the following things. They were produced and never paid for to this day:

Casket, covered with Lyons velvet, silver moldings	$850
Heavy plated handles	60
Solid silver plate, engraved in Roman letters	75
Ten linen scarfs	150
Floral decorations	225
Music and quartet choir at the house	40
Twenty carriages	140
Then fifteen other important expenditures amounting to	336
Making an aggregate of	$1876

And all that to get one poor mortal to his last home and never paid for! Swindled his family. Swindled the world. He is swindling it now. It is one of the great curses of this day, the extravagance, the wicked extravagance, of the country.

And then look how the cause of God is impoverished. Men give so much sometimes for their indulgences they have nothing for the cause of God and religion. Twenty-two million dollars expended in this country a year for religious purposes; but what are the twenty-two millions expended for religion compared with the hundred millions expended on cigars and tobacco and then two thousand millions of dollars spent for rum! So a man who had a fortune of $750,000 or what amounted to that in London spent it all in indulgences, chiefly in gluttonies, and sent hither and yon for all the delicacies and often had a meal that would cost $100 or $200 for himself. Then he was reduced to one guinea, with which he bought a rare bird, had it cooked in best style, ate it, took two hours for digestion, walked out on Westminster bridge, and jumped into the Thames—on a large scale what men are doing on a small scale.

Oh, my friends, let us take our stand against the extravagances of society. Do not pay for things which are frivolous when you may lack the necessities. Do not put one month's wages or salary into a trinket, just one trinket. Keep your credit good by seldom asking for any.

Do not starve a whole year to afford one Belshazzar's carnival. Do not buy a coat of many colors, and then in six months be out at the elbows. Flourish not, as some people I have known, who took apartments at a fashionable hotel and had elegant drawing rooms attached and then vanished in the night, not even leaving their compliments for the landlord.

I tell you, my friends, in the day of God's judgment we shall not only have to give an account for the way we made our money, but for the way we spent it. We have got to leave all the things that surround us now.

Alas, if any of you in the dying hour felt like the dying actress who asked that the casket of jewels be brought to her and then turned them over with her pale hand and said, "Alas, that I have to leave you so soon!" Better in that hour have one treasure of heaven than the bridal trousseau of a Marie Antoinette, or to have been seated with Caligula at a banquet which cost its thousands of dollars, or to have been carried to our last resting place with Senators and princes as pall bearers. They that consecrate their wealth, their time, their all, to God shall be held in everlasting remembrance, while I have the authority of this book for announcing that the name of the wicked shall rot.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR JULY 24.

Subject: God Calls Abram. Gen. xii., 1-9.—Golden Text, Gen. xii., 3.—Memory Ve. ses, 1-3.—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

Introduction.—Thus far the Bible story has been a history of the entire race, but from this point to the close of Genesis a single family (Abraham's) is brought into prominent notice, and the rest of the tribes of men are referred to only incidentally.

1. "Abram." The name was afterward changed to Abraham, meaning the "father of a multitude." He was born two years after the death of Noah, and about half way between Adam and Christ. "Get thee out." He was tried whether he loved God better than he loved his home and dearest friends, and whether he could willingly leave all to go along with God. This appears to be the second call. For some unknown reason Abram and his company remained at Haran for a number of years instead of going onto Canaan. "Thy father's house." Terah being now dead, it is very probable that the family were determined to go no further, but to settle at Haran, and as Abram might have felt inclined to stop with them in this place, hence the ground and necessity of the second call recorded here. Acts 7: 2-4. "I will shew thee." God does not tell him what it is, that He may still cause him to walk by faith and not by sight. The apostle assures us that in all this Abram had spiritual views (Heb. 11: 8-10); he looked for a better country, and considered the land of promise only as typical of the heavenly inheritance. Abram was called upon to separate himself from all the idolatrous influences of friends and country.

2. "A great nation." There are seven distinct promises in verses 2 and 3. When God called him away from his own people He promised to make him the distinguished head of a great nation. This promise required great faith; he was seventy-five years old and as yet had no child. A great nation would be one of large numbers, of noble character, of great influence in blessing others—a nation which should serve and obey God. "Thy name great." Known, honored and loved by multitudes of people. It is a remarkable fact that perhaps no mere man has ever been so widely and so permanently honored. "A blessing." By his integrity, wisdom and faith his life has been a great blessing to the whole world for 4000 years.

3. "That bless thee," etc. Abram's cause was to be God's cause. This is still true in the case of the righteous man. 2 Chron. 16: 9. "In thee." "In thy posterity, in the Messiah who shall spring from thee." "All families." By family is meant here, and often elsewhere, a people, or nation, regarded as one great family descended from a common parent. "Be blessed." The gospel of Christ shall be preached throughout the world and great blessings will be given to all mankind.

4. "Abram departed." His obedience was speedy and submissive, for "he went out, not knowing whither he went, but knowing whom he followed." "Had spoken." God had not only commanded him to go, but had given him many precious promises. These promises were early fulfilled in a measure, assuring him of their complete fulfilment; he could realize the reasonableness of the commands of God. "Lot." Lot was Abram's nephew, the son of his brother Haran. "Haran." Sometimes written Charran.

5. "Sarai." "My princess," afterwards changed to Sarah, "a princess;" that is, a princess for all nations and no longer for Abram alone. "Souls—gotten in Haran." This may apply either to the persons who were employed in the service of Abram, or to the persons he had been the instrument of converting to the knowledge of the true God. "Land of Canaan." A good land possessed by a bad people, who for their iniquities were to be expelled. See Lev. 18: 25. This land was made a type of the kingdom of God; as Abram left his own country, father's house and kindred, and took at the command of God a journey to this promised land, nor ceased till he arrived in it; so should we cast aside every weight, come out from the workers of iniquity, set out for the kingdom of God, nor ever rest till we reach the heavenly country. "Into—Canaan they came." It was the divine plan at the first that Abram should go to Canaan, and now, after several years' delay at Haran, God calls him again, and this time Abram reaches the land that had been selected as a home for himself and his descendants.

6. "Passed through." Abram passed through the land from the north toward the south. "Place of Shechem" (R. V.) Between Mounts Ebal and Gerizim. "Oak if Moreh" (R. V.) Moreh was probably the original owner of this oak grove in Shechem. "In the land." No doubt Abram had come to Canaan expecting to find it a real paradise, but now two difficulties confront him: 1. The Canaanite was in the land to interfere with his right of possession, and, 2. There was a severe famine in the land at just this time. Faith has its trials as well as its answers. It is not to be imagined that the man of faith, having pushed out from the shore of circumstances finds it all smooth and easy sailing.

7. "Lord appeared." In what way this appearance was made we know not; it was probably by the great angel of his covenant, Jesus, the Christ. The appearance, whatever it was, perfectly satisfied Abram, and proved itself to be supernatural and divine. It is worthy of remark that Abram is the first man to whom God is said to have shown Himself or appeared. "Will I give." God was dealing with Abram not in his private and personal capacity merely, but with a view to high and important interests in future ages. "An altar." By this solemn act of devotion he made an open profession of his religion, established the worship of the true God and declared his faith in the promise.

8. "Bethel." It was then called Luz, and was named Bethel after his vision. See chap. 28: 19. "Hai." His tent was pitched between Bethel and Hai; Hai was five miles east of Bethel. "Tent—altar." Where Abram has a tent, there God must have an altar, as he well knows there is no safety out side of under the divine protection. How few who build houses ever think of the propriety and necessity of building an altar to their Maker. "Called," etc. The sacrifices were accompanied with prayer.

9. "Journeyed—south." He went to Egypt because of the famine in Canaan. He was in the very place in which God had set him, and, evidently, he received no direction to leave it. True, the famine was there, and, moreover, Egypt was at hand, offering deliverance from pressure; still the path of God's servant was plain.

Wealth has made such strides in the past few years that a gift of less than a million dollars creates scarcely a ripple.

A folder issued by a Southern railway shows that at the end of 1900 there were 495 textile mills along the lines of its system, being a gain of ninety-four mills with 22,185 looms and 1,137,500 spindles during the year. Of these mills sixty-six are in Georgia, thirty-three in Alabama, 159 in North Carolina, and 102 in South Carolina, the others being in Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri and Virginia.

GOVERNOR Jelks has announced his intention of seeking re-election at the expiration of his present term. If he continues through his term as popular as he is at present there is no doubt but that he can easily be re-elected.

ELECTIONS every four years is one of the best acts performed by the Convention. We have had too many elections, and the time and money saved by bunching them together in the future will be greatly appreciated by the people.

THE fifty days provided for in the enabling act for the Constitutional Convention expired last Saturday. That fifty days was just about sufficient for the Convention to get fairly down to work. As they were not disposed to spoil a good thing they decided to continue indefinitely. Let us hope another fifty days will suffice.

The drouth and heat has ruined the hay crop in Illinois, Missouri and Kansas, and seriously damaged the corn crop. Bread may be cheap because the wheat crop is large, but all food crops for animals will be scarce and high-priced. Hay will be particularly high. Alabama may grow nearly all the corn she will need, but she will have but little to take the place of imported hay. Much fodder can, however, be pulled, the more the better, and peas may be utilized as coarse food, and much Johnson grass can be cut. Every pound of forage that will serve as coarse food for horses, mules and cattle should be saved, for hay will be beyond reach almost. Twenty-five dollar hay is not at all improbable. In other words, hay will be worth over a cent a pound, and the feeding of it to animals will induce many to say that they are indeed eating their heads off. It is not too late to do a great deal towards the saving of coarse food for animals—"roughness," as it is sometimes called. Every pound of it saved means something to Alabama this year. Every pound of it saved means that more cotton money will be kept at home and that in turn means a great deal to the people, big and little, of the State.—Aye Herald.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

The close of the fiftieth day of the Constitutional Convention finds the work of constitution making well in hand. The committee on private corporations is the only one which is not yet reported and five articles have been read the third time, adopted and sent to the committee on harmony. These are the preamble and declaration of rights, the articles on executive, banks and banking, local legislation and state and county boundaries. Besides these the article on taxation has been adopted, all except those sections which limit the taxing powers of cities and counties, and more than half of the articles on legislative department, which is now under consideration, has been adopted. This article will probably be adopted by Tuesday.

The articles remaining to be considered are those on judiciary, impeachments, suffrage and elections, representations, exemptions, militia, education, municipal corporations, private corporations and amending the constitution and miscellaneous.

There is no change in the article on exemptions and little change in the article on militia. There are six separate reports to the article on judiciary, and the article on suffrage and elections will, of course, consume more time than any other, the reform of the suffrage being the main object for which the convention was called. Debate will be more extensive on this article than any of the others, a resolution extending the time of debate for each member having recently been adopted. Since the democratic caucus decided not to take this matter up it will mean that all the hot air speeches which might have been expended in the caucus will have to be delivered in the convention. With the work on hand it seems that it will take at least another month to get through with it.

The convention took up the suffrage question Tuesday. Judge Coleman of Greene, the chairman of the committee, made a short introductory speech, saying that the plan was the best they could devise and that it was constitutional. He was applauded several times, especially his reference to the Confederate soldier. The gallery was well filled and for the first time since the convention opened one end contained about a dozen negroes who were interested spectators.

Section 1 of the article which confined the right to vote to male citizens of the State who were citizens of the United States was adobted. Mr. Beddow had it amended so as to allow foreigners to vote who were not citizens, but had declared their intention of becoming such.

Section 2 was adopted which requires a residence of two years in the State and one in the county before any person can vote. He must also have been duly registered and have paid on or before February 1 of the year in which the election is held all poll taxes which shall have been required of him.

Section 3 which was adopted, requires all elections by the people to be by ballot and elections in a representative capacity to be viva voce.

The convention was considering section 4, which contains the grandfather clause, when the hour of adjournment arrived.

A DASTARDLY DEED.

On Friday evening last as Mr. George Willis was rising from the supper table at his home at Cane Creek he was shot and badly wounded by Joe Christian, a negro, who had been working for him. Some days previously Mr. Willis had had occasion to call the negro to time in relation to his work, and on the day of the shooting some more words had passed between them. The negro went to his home and got his gun and returning to Mr. Willis' he entered the door and raising the gun fired. The shot went into Mr. Willis' neck and face, destroying the left eye. Messengers were dispatched for Dr. Matthews and Sheriff Killgore who at once went out. Dr. Matthews did all that was possible to alleviate the sufferings of Mr. Willis, and at last accounts we are glad to say he is doing as well as possible.

In the meantime the neighbors had arrested the negro and there was some talk of summary vengeance, but cooler counsels prevailed and he was turned over to the Sheriff and lodged in jail at Clanton. He was carried before Justice of the Peace E. B. Deason and acknowledged that he intended to kill Mr. Willis.

Mr. Willis is one of the best citizens in this section and much sympathy goes out to himself and family in this affliction.

"Mebbe so yo'll git 50 cents."

"No, no; run along."

"I reckons yo' all ain't got er quah'tah?"

"No."

"Ner a dime?"

"No, not even a dime," replied the woman, beginning to laugh.

"Well, how much is yo' got?" questioned Ham, showing his ivories. "I sut'nly does wanter git de job."

"I've got just a nickel."

"Well, I'm jus' a-lookin fer nickel jobs." And he straightway began.—Washington Star.

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucuous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot touch the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "SNUFFLES" the GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

GARDEN AND FARM

DON'T LET THE COW FALL OFF.

When a cow is in full flow of milk she should not be allowed to fall off as long as it can be avoided. If she does not seem to like her food tempt her with something else, and always milk to the last drop. Cows like a variety of food and will give good returns therefor if it is provided.

BRAN AS A FERTILIZER.

Bran is an excellent fertilizer for crops, as it is rich in nitrogen and mineral matter, but it is made more valuable when it is fed to stock, not only because it serves as food, but also because when it is passed through the body of an animal it is in better form for crops. Bran is a cheap material to purchase, as it brings profit as food and produces manure of the best quality.

KEEP A LARGE FLOCK OF POULTRY.

The importance of keeping as many fowls as possible may be demonstrated by the fact that eggs are usually in demand at all seasons of the year and can be sold for cash. In proportion to the capital invested in poultry compared with larger stock the profits are very large. The fowls give returns every month in the year, and if the supply of eggs begins to fall off there is some compensation in the higher prices obtained. Milk, as a rule, fluctuates but little in price compared with eggs, as the latter in winter will bring nearly twice as much as in summer. Good quarters, cleanliness and varied food will induce the hens to lay, both in summer and winter, and farmers will find it profitable to enlarge their flocks and bestow care upon the fowls.

HURRY AND HAY MAKING.

There is a time in the curing of every swath of hay when enough of the water has been absorbed by the sun's rays, and every hour added damages the quality of the product on the upper side of the swath before the lower side is cured sufficiently to put in barn or stack. When this time comes, start the side-delivery rake, which will throw the swaths each four and one-half feet in width into a narrow and puffy windrow, which will soon cure to the right stage to start the loader. Here is another important stage in hay making. It must not be too green, or it will heat in the mow; it must not be too dry, or the leaves of clover and even of timothy will shatter off. With an expert in the field, who shall direct the speed of mowing machine and the time of rake and the loader, a quality of hay unexcelled may be made, and with a rapidity undreamed of by our fathers who used the scythe, hand rake and the hand fork.

It is presumed you have a hay carrier in the barn and it and the ropes are in complete repair with the mow ready for the first load of new hay. Should there be a surplus beyond the filling of the barn or hay shed, you should have in store 100 feet of one-half inch wire cable, a cable carrier and four light telephone poles twenty-four feet long ready to run up for use in stacking this surplus, or the entire crop, if there is no barn. If clover goes into the stacks you will no doubt top out with timothy, or what is better when it can be secured, slough grass. As to extra help, it better be secured at once; if not of the kind desired, as good day laborers, there is just now being released from duty a lot of high school boys that would be the better of the tan and nerve they will cultivate in a vacation on the farm. They will need some training in the vegetable or fruit-garden with a hoe to fit them for making hay, or some practice in corn plowing to make them good teamsters for the mower or hay rake, but they will beat the old men loading hay on a wagon constantly in motion.

Be sure to put your strong, slow teams on the wagon that hauls the loads, for speed in this work depends upon the ability of the loaders keeping constantly at it, and for this reason no more swaths should be put into a windrow than can be handled easily wth a team in a slow walk. Also put a safe team on the hay rake, for a side-delivery is a bad thing in a runaway. I know, for I have had experience.—E. E. Chester, in American Agriculturist.

METHODS OF PLANTING STRAWBERRIES.

As to methods of planting strawberries it may be said that the old method has been discarded—planting in rows three to three and one-half feet apart and the plants from twelve to fifteen inches apart in rows, keeping off the runners until late in July and then allowing the runners to grow and root at will, making a matted row. In this old system many plants are almost on top of others, the roots barely in the ground, and they suffer in a season of drought. The rows are so wide that to pick fruit in the centre it is almost necessary to crush fruits on the outside of the row. This system gives few large, first-class fruits. The up-to-date grower starts with the assumption that the largest and highest colored fruits are found on plants along the outside of the rows, and therefore he plans to have as many outside rows as possible. This he accomplishes by having the rows closer together and much narrower. The rows are made from thirty to thirty-six inches apart, and the plants from eighteen to twenty-four inches, much depending on the capability of the variety as a plant maker. If the plants used for a new bed are strong and start into growth vigorously, the first runners are used, as it has been found that under most conditions the plants about twelve months old yield the greatest number of fine fruits. These first runners are usually "bedded in," i.e., planted by hand, training them along the wide way of the rows, using from four to eight of the first runners and cutting off those growing later. This method of planting allows cultivation both ways until the runners start, retaining moisture and saving labor in hoeing.

Clean stray or swale grass makes the best winter mulch. The rows are covered two to four inches deep. This winter mulch should be raked from the plants and left between the rows as a protection to the fruit and a safeguard against drought in the fruiting season.

The use of well-rotted manure, plowed under when fitting the land for plants, gives the best of results in many cases. Especially is this the case when a dry growing season occurs, the plants being able at once to obtain available plant food, and growing without check and making runners early in the season. In many soils the manure adds the needed humus. Green or half-rotted manure is more often an injury than a benefit, because of the many weed seeds it contains. Many strawberry beds are practically ruined by the weeds introduced by the use of such manure. Perhaps the better method of using manure is to apply it rather heavily to the crop grown on the land the year before strawberries are planted, following that crop with a cover before setting plants.—Cornell University Bulletin No. 189, by Professor L. H. Bailey.

SUCCESSFUL CALF RAISING.

A calf rearer who has lost only one out of ninety calves born alive in five seasons, and that one an animal which was born with an internal malady, may be accepted as a safe guide upon the subject. With such credentials Mr. Lawrence, manager of the Newton Rigg Farm for the county councils of Cumberland and Westmorland, came before the Chamber of Agriculture of those counties a few days ago to describe his experience. In rearing calves by hand losses are often numerous, but Mr. Lawrence showed how they could be reduced to a minimum by proper feeding, attention to sanitary conditions, and the timely administration of a little medicine, chiefly to cure "white scour" in its early stage.

When a calf is born it is immediately removed to a pen well littered with dry straw, rubbed well with straw and covered over with a little of the same material. In half an hour the calf is fed, by means of the fingers, with about a pint of its mother's first meal of the day. During the first week the calf has nothing but its mother's warm milk, getting a pint and a half three times a day at first, and a quantity gradually increasing to two quarts at the end of a week. On the third day the young animal is taught to drink without the fingers. The food is the same, two quarts three times a day through the second week, while in the third week half the milk is separated or skimmed, half a pint of linseed soup being added to it, to take the place of the cream. In the fourth week the only alteration is the addition of a handful of sweet hay twice a day. In the fifth week the diet consists of two and a half pints of warm separated or skimmed milk, with half a pint of linseed soup mixed with each quart, three times a day, and a little sweet hay night and morning.

This diet is continued to the end of the eighth week. After this the linseed soup is omitted, a handful of broken linseed cake and a small quantity of pulped swedes being given after the midday meal, or grass in summer instead of swedes. From the beginning of the twelfth week the midday meal is omitted, three-quarters of a pound of linseed cake and crushed oats together being given at midday, with half a gallon of pulped swedes or some grass at noon, while the separated milk and hay are given in the morning and in the evening. If desirable, the milk may be discontinued when the calf is five months old, and other food increased accordingly, but it is better to keep on with the milk till the calf is nine months old. Linseed soup is prepared by putting two pounds of linseed to soak in four gallons of water over night, boiling and stirring it for half an hour next day, and, five minutes before boiling is finished, adding half a pound of flour previously beaten up with a little water.—London Daily Standard.

SHORT AND USEFUL POINTERS.

Have a box stall for your cows to calve in.

Good butter has often been spoilt by poor salt.

The lambs should be fed in a pen which the sheep cannot enter.

Good feed will sometimes make an apparently poor cow a good one.

An animal with a weak constitution should never be used as a breeder.

Your poultry will never be healthy if you keep them in damp quarters.

Never grow the same crop several years in succession on the same land.

Remember that little lambs are easily chilled. This is a matter easily attended to.

Cows do not require much exercise, but they must have an abundance of fresh air.

No dairyman should ever sell any of his best cows if he intends remaining in the business.

It would be money in a great many farmers' pockets if they would study how to save hauling and traveling.

One of the many good points in favor of rotation is that it helps to do away with a great many of the insect pests.

Do not try to economize on the feed of a sow who has suckling pigs. Do your level best to keep her from losing flesh.

A cow that gives a big mess of milk always has a large appetite, and it is very important that the dairyman should satisfy it.

Everything that you send to market should be graded. Sort out the poorest and the best and keep them in separate packages.

THE HOUSE BEAUTIFUL.

Modish Notions Followed by Those in the Swim.

Bandanna handkerchiefs made into cushion covers, with part of the handkerchief for frills, are as effective and serviceable summer covers as one can get, especially for porch swinging seats or general utility use.

Color effects and combinations have reached such a fine point in house decoration that those seeking the best results will only use dark wood picture frames in rooms with dark woodwork, and water colors in light frames in rooms with white woodwork.

Curtains of cream Colonial net make admirable summer window hangings, and outer ones of green raw silk accompany them nicely.

Anything quaint finds favor these days for home adornment. It may be awkward, it may not be nearly so convenient as a similar modern thing, but if it is "quaint" or "old-timey" it is the desired thing.

* * *

The jute one hears so much about for summer use should not deceive one by its name into believing that it is always simple or inexpensive. On the contrary, it often has all the appearance of silk brocade, and comes in both plain and figured goods and in the two-toned styles. Yet when one sees and feels it one appreciates what an admirable summer upholstery stuff it is.

* * *

Colored organdy curtains are the personification of dainty coolness for summer for a young girl's room or for milady's boudoir. One charming new design is in striped effect, a tiny lace stripe and a running stripe of tiny roses.

* * *

Madras in stained glass effects is another of this season's most favored hangings. Art nouveau designs are also prominent, together with a lattice weaving.

* * *

Gobelin-blue burlap is slowly coming to the front as the fashionable wall covering in combination with white woodwork, supplanting the green that has held sway so long.

* * *

Blue and white Java prints, blue and white rugs, old blue and white china, a deep yellow wall covering, and mahogany furniture, make an ideal furnishing scheme for a summer dining room.—Philadelphia Record.

For Table or Desk.

A nice gift to offer to a bride or for a birthday gift is the new library set, which might more properly be styled a desk set. Handsome brocaded silk or velvet is used to cover the set of pieces, which consist of articles. For the desk you have the blotting book, penwiper, paper rack and little tray or scrap basket to hold letters or old papers. The complete library set is elaborate. It comprises the handsome table cloth of brocaded satin or silk in pomegranate, dull Indian red, Maltese blue or amber. To match the table cover you have the blotting book, paper rack, the "utility box," a "book stand" for books or magazines, a photograph tray, a penwiper and scrap basket. The decorative art societies take orders for making such sets, but the girl with clever fingers can make them for herself.

Cocoanut Cream—One-half cup sugar, one pint milk thickened with four tablespoons of corn starch. Cook thoroughly for five minutes, when the raw flavor of the corn starch will have entirely disappeared. Add one cup grated cocoanut and one teaspoon of vanilla, then stir in the beaten whites of three eggs and pour into a mold to set.

Apricot Jelly—Stew one-half pound of well-washed and soaked dried apricots in a pint of water with a cupful of sugar until very soft, then add two tablespoonfuls of gelatine, previously dissolved in cold water, enough to cover; press through a colander into a jelly mold, set in a cold place for several hours and serve with whipped cream (a delicious and economical dessert).

Gingerade—Dissolve three pounds of loaf sugar in two gallons of water, add beaten whites of three eggs and two ounces ground Jamaica ginger moistened with a little water, bring slowly to the boiling point, skim and settle. When cold add juice of a large lemon and one-fourth yeast cake dissolved in two tablespoonfuls warm water. Mix, strain, bottle, tie the corks down and in two days it is ready to use.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

The French mental specialist, Dr. Toulouse, pleads in the Paris Debats for as much liberty for lunatics as is given to lepers and to consumptives, on the ground that, if they were free, they would not supply a larger percentage of mischief-doers than other classes of the population.

In this era of "world umpires" interest in the sun's empire is hardly surprising. An English inquirer seeks to learn its size, and points out that three well-known comets of short period have orbits extending beyond that of Neptune, while one comet of a long period—Donatis—has a period of nearly 2000 years. If this last named comet really moves about the sun, it is calculated that the diameter of the solar system must be nearly 60,000,000,000 miles.

A remarkable discovery by Captain H. P. Deasy in the Kuenlun mountains is that of a species of marine plant, called grasswrack, at an elevation of 16,500 feet, more than 10,000 feet higher than the summit of Mt. Washington. The plants were not growing, but were found, with their leaves and fruit, deposited in a bed 10 or 12 feet thick, which was covered and interspersed with strata of blue clay. The explanation offered is that the deposit once formed part of the boom of a salt lake.

Pass a ray of sunlight through a drop of water and the colored rays are split up and thrown in different directions. The sunlight shining through many drops of falling rain after a shower is all split into colors, and the result is the gorgeous rainbow. The scattered spray of a sea wave of a waterfall or a fountain, makes little rainbows, caused in the same way. Each kind of light has its own special uses. The red rays of light make the leaves of the tree grow, and hasten all rooting and decay. Moreover, if you cut off the red rays, plants will grow with golden brown leaves instead of green.

Study of the meteorological phenomena during the total eclipse of the sun in May, 1900, has led to the discovery that such an eclipse develops a cold-air cyclone as the shadow sweeps across the earth. During the eclipse, according to H. C. Clayton, the direction of the winds was practically reversed as the shadow moved, and there was an overflow of air from the shadow to a distance of 1500 miles. Mr. Clayton believes that this discovery indicates that the fall of temperature at night must tend to produce a cold air cyclone, while the heat of day tends to produce a warm-air one, and thus the puzzling phenomenon of the double diurnal period in air-pressure receives an explanation.

Dr. Paul Michel, a well-known French physician, has devised an instrument for getting rid of the disagreeable and painful stitching of cuts and wounds with needle and thread to keep the parts in place and induce healing. The instrument is a sort of forceps, adapted to apply to the wound a series of nickel clasps or hooks resembling those sometimes used to fasten the corners of pasteboard or wooden boxes. They are provided with short, sharp teeth, which are forced into the epidermis sufficiently to hold them but not so deeply as to cause much pain. From 20 to 30 of these clasps can be applied in a minute if necessary; they are easily removed at any time without pain and they can be easily disinfected.

Poison-Proof People.

There are entire communties of poison proof people who partake of doses of white arsenic with as much zest as the average person partakes of a meal.

Chief among these singularly gifted people are the Styrian and Corinthian shepherds who inhabit the districts of Lamprecht, Salzburg, Hartberg, Leoben, Oberzeirung and the Erzebirge mountains. The sturdy mountaineers consider that arsenic improves their wind for chamois climbing.

Some years ago Dr. Knapp put two of these men through their paces before the German Society of Physicians assembled at Gratz. The one ate six grains of white arsenic, or enough to kill three men without experiencing the slightest inconvenience. The other partook of four grains of yellow arsenic or orpiment with equal impunity. It was explained that, seeing the good effect of the drug upon the coats and condition of their flocks, many of these shepherds start the practice under the impression that taken in moderation it is good for human beings also.

Usually started with a small weekly dose spread upon bread and butter, the embryo arsenic eater has to undergo a very severe test of his devotion to the drug. Violent sickness and burning pains accompany its first use, and the drug speedily asserts its fatal power over its devotee.

Any attempt to leave off the drug is generally fatal. The women of these arsenic eating districts are famous for their beautiful complexions and luxuriant tresses.—Waverley Magazine.

CAR WHEELS MADE OF PAPER MONEY

Cancelled Notes Representing $1,500,000 Devoted to That Use Every Day.

National Bank and United States Government notes to the face value of about $1,500,000 were destroyed at Washington on a recent Saturday. They were reduced to pulp and a few months hence will be spinning over steel rails in the form of railroad car-wheels. From a banknote to a car-wheel is quite a radical transformation, but it is happening every day. Whenever you get hold of a soiled ten-dollar bill or a ten-thousand-dollar note just bear in mind that some day it will be an atom in the revolving mass under some lightning express.

The Treasury Department in Washington destroys between $450,000,000 and $500,000,000 worth of paper money a year. Just think of it! Nearly half a billion dollars annually. Soiled currency to the amount of a million and a half a day reaches the Treasury for redemption. Two big pulp mills—macerators they are termed officially—grind them into a mass which looks like putty. The pulp is then treatde with an alkali, which extracts the ink that constituted all the printing and inscriptions on the bill. Next it is converted into bales and shipped to a car-wheel manufacturer. This pulp makes the best kind of wheels. The Government sells it for $40 a ton, after it is baled and dry.

The maceration of currency is in charge of a committee of three Treasury employes, who represent respectively the Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasurer of the United States and the Comptroller of the Currency, and are designated as the Destruction Committee. Every day this committee is at work, and it sees every bundle of cancelled notes dumped into the macerators, which are constructed just like paper mills, and are operated by machinery. For every note that is destroyed, unless it should come from a national bank that is in liquidation, a new one is made at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Thus, while $1,500,000 of paper money is converted in to car-wheels every day, new money to the same value is made every day.

All this work costs the United States Government nothing. The national banks stand all the expense, although the Treasury Department has absolute control of the redemption division.

Twenty or twenty-five years ago the Government used to burn cancelled currency, but that method of destroying it was abandoned when it was discovered that on windy days the draft in the chimneys would draw notes only partially burned from the furnaces and spread them over the White House lot and neighboring streets. Such bills have been redeemed in the past and Uncle Sam had to stand the loss. But with the macerators no greenbacks escape.—Cleveland Leader.

Government's Debt to Morris and Nelson.

Robert Morris rendered inestimable service to his adopted country by putting his own private fortune into the breach in those early days when the infant nation was in the closest of financial straits. The one million five hundred thousand dollars which made it possible for Washington to carry on the campaign against Lord Cornwallis was raised entirely upon his own personal security. For the most trying eight years of our history this noble man stood at the monetary helm of our government and guided it through many perils. Years after, in his old age, unfortunate land speculations ruined him. His creditors demanded immediate payment. His country could have saved Morris by paying back a tithe of what he had freely given to it in its time of need. This was not done. To our lasting disgrace, he was thrown into a debtor's prison and died there, an old man of seventy-two.

Thomas Nelson did for Virginia what Robert Morris did for the nation—saved the State from bankruptcy by devoting to her use his large fortune. When he was in command of the State Militia at Yorktown the exigencies of the situation seemed to require the destruction of a certain large and imposing building. He did not hesitate to give the order to bombard it, although the house was his own and by far the handsomest building in the place. It is sad to know that this gallant Virginia Congressman and Governor was so embarrassed by the loans that he had made to his State, to pay its regiments when there was no money in the treasury, that in his last days his remaining property was sold to pay his debts. He was but fifty-one when he died, worn out by anxieties and years of ill-health.—Lora S. La Mance in New Lippincott.

Turtles Caught a Thief.

The pickpocket who tried to "pinch" a likely looking man's pocketbook and found his fingers in the grasp of two snapping turtles was a Japanese. A native traveler in Japan had bought the turtles, and, being afraid that he would be charged heavily for their transportation as live animals on the train, he placed them in a small portable trunk which he carried. When he got on the train he held the trunk so carefully under his arm that a thief who was in the crowd was sure the man had something valuable in the box. So he got into the same car and took an adjoining seat. Taking the first opportunity he cut a small hole in the trunk with a sharp knife and slipped in his hand.

About this time the turtles concluded that there was "something doing," and they took hold of his fingers in a hearty way. Gritting his teeth, the thief tried to withdraw his hand, but he couldn't. Then he howled and the owner of the trunk seized him and turned him over to the train people, who at the next station gave him to a policeman. The incident, however, wasn't closed until the traveler was punished for violation of the railway regulations.

American macaroni made from American wheat by Americans and by an American process is to be one of the slogans of the industrial battle in which the United States is now engaged. All talk about the adaptability of American wheat for the manufacture of macaroni has been removed by recent tests made by one of the largest manufacturers in Italy, the details of which have been forwarded to the State Department at Washington by Consul Hayden at Castellamare di Stabia. A MURDEROUS YOUTH.

On Friday Clarence Davis, of Cincinnati, aged 17 years, shot and seriously wounded his step-father, William Wooldenshe, and also attempted to kill his young wife and two young men whom he charged with slandering him. His child wife had left. Davis has attempted suicide three times and threatened to kill anyone with whom he quarreled. He shot at his step-father four times, one bullet in the neck, just missing the jugular vein. He was disarmed and arrested, and believed to be insane.

TO PREVENT LYNCHING

A republican delegate to the Virginia Constitutional Convention has introduced a resolution providing that the governor shall offer a reward of $500 for the conviction of persons engaged in lynching, that the crime shall be murder in the first degree when accomplished, and that the governor will pay $1,000 to the heirs of persons lynched, the money to be chargeable to the county or city in which the crime was committed.

AMMONIA BOILERS EXPLODE

Supposed defective ammonia boilers at the ice factory at Elizabeth City, N. C., of the Crystal Ice and Coal Company exploded Saturday morning, completely demolishing the plant. WHEN PATRIOTS REJOICE

Something About the Fourth and Its History.

It is only 125 years since the Fourth was established, and the most wonderful era in the history of the world dawned in America, when the old Liberty bell rang out the glad tidings to the people of a disenthralled land, and the Declaration was made which spoke to the world of posterity in thunder tones:

"We hold these truths to be self evident: That all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

The new Liberty bell is essentially an American product, says the Detroit Free Press, for the old bell was cast in London, and the order for it was sent a year before it was received in this country. At last it came in 1752, and before it was landed from the ship that brought it hundreds of people went to inspect it and rejoiced in its coming. It was all that had been expected, but an accident ruined its clear tone and mutilated it so badly that it had to be recast. Isaac Norris, Esq., speaker of the colonial assembly, was given the superintendence of the task, and to him is ascribed the honor of having originally suggested the motto, "Proclaim liberty throughout the land and to all the inhabitants thereof."

The reason of the breaking of the first bell was that it was too brittle, and its tone was too high and shrill. But the new bell was considered perfect, and, mounted on its pedestal in the old statehouse at Philadelphia, it rang in the birth of freedom on July 4, 1776, and its reverberation still echoes in the hearts of Americans everywhere.

The old statehouse bell, time hallowed bell,
The magic tones were first to tell
In thunder peals a nation free!

For 50 years the bell of freedom kept the national jubilee. Then it cracked and became silent. During the world's fair it was conveyed, a mute object of patriotic adoration, from Philadelphia to Chicago, and there exhibited. No distinguished traveler was ever escorted with more care and watchfulness or received more homage from the patriotic people wherever it greeted its coming.

In the New England states the Fourth of July is celebrated with greatest ardor. Cannon are fired at sunrise, and the ringing of bells, the snapping and cracking of firecrackers and the shouts of the juveniles make a noise that is deafening, but welcome. Later in the day there is a meeting of the military, and the bearing of flags and beating of drums add to the glory of the spectacle. Picnics are attended at rural groves, orations are made by speakers selected for the occasion, and the nation's birthday is celebrated by a fitting demonstration of enthusiasm, skyrockets and illumination ending the sport.

The manufacture of fireworks for the Fourth of July is one of the industries of the country. The Roman candles, set pieces, hissing skyrockets which turn into many colored serpents, stars, flowers, prismatic fountains, comets with long tails of variegated colors, the "devil among the tailors" and a hundred other fantastic sorts are made in America. The factories for the manufacture of fireworks are seldom located in cities on account of the dangerous explosives employed, but in some quiet spot where a little village of 50 or more cottages surrounds the factory, all being inclosed by a high board fence, upon which the placard "No Admittance" is conspicuously painted. Women and girls are employed in the less dangerous work of preparing the cases, while men and boys work with the combustible filling.

Fourth of July Doints.

Don't let the bells, when they awaken you Thursday morning, lead you to think there is a general alarm of fire. That will not come until later in the day.

Don't trouble yourself to call your son and heir. There is one day in the year when he gets up without your assistance.

Don't endeavor to add to the vehemence of the celebration by encouraging your dog to bark or "mamma's baby" to inform the world that it has a job of tooth cutting on hand.

Don't blow into the face of the lighted firecracker. It may resent the indignity by an unexpected demonstration on its part.

Don't make a fishmonger of yourself by going about blowing a tin horn.

Don't worry overmuch about the boy. It won't make him feel any more comfortable when he comes in with an eye in eclipse, and it is just possible your worry will be all for naught.

Don't leave any of your fingers by the wayside. Other days are coming when you may have use for the entire outfit.—Selected.

One Fourth of July Boy.

He started out early, our dear little boy,
With seventeen packs and a nice cannon toy,
A pistol for caps and torpedoes galore,
And a hundred and forty-nine pinwheels or more.

We hired a man just to watch him at play
And to follow his footsteps around all the day.
Ten times in the morning he saved the dear's life,
But was blown up himself and sent home to his wife.

And at night, when they brought what was left of our boy,
Our anguish was tempered by small grains of joy.
For he said, as the powder was picked from his eye,
"I wish 'at tomorrow was Fourth o' July!"

Then the doctors came round at our urgent request
And tacked on his limbs where they fitted the best,
But the kid only said, "I'd be willin to die
Every day if 'twas only the Fourth o' July!"

Among the public servants who are worried by foolish questions the superintendent of mails in the postoffice gets his full share. One of his visitors on a certain occasion was a man who said to the deputy who answered the call at the window:

"I am going out of town today and want to get a letter to my brother who is on board the Majestic and she hasn't got due until Wednesday. I don't know where he will stay in New York or where he will go from here. Can you help me?"

"Certainly we can," said the clerk. "A mailboat goes to meet the steamer and if you address your letter properly and put domestic postage on it it will be delivered all right."

"But how shall I address it—what shall I send it?"

"Address it 'John Smith, passenger on board incoming steamer Majestic due in New York, Dec. 12.' That will reach him."

"No city? No nothing?"

"That's all—just as I told you."

The man thanked the clerk and went away, and came back a little later with an addressed letter in his hand.

"Say," he said to the clerk, "when I put that letter in I've addressed it and stamped it all right, but the name of the man isn't John Smith. How about that?"—New York Tribune.

Poaching in London Parks

Nearly all the London parks are well stocked with eatable birds, and it is the easiest thing in the world for the loafers to kill them, clean them and carry them off to the nearest hotel for roasting. A story is told by London dooners of a couple of impecunious Scotch black and white artists who took a garret in Lincoln's Inn Fields and lived for a week on Law court pigeons, which are plump, lively, plentiful and tame and would doubtless make a good meal. In addition to poaching in the parks, there is good reason to believe that many of the rare birds sold to shady bird dealers are snared there.—Glasgow News.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

The weather continues hot, although at this moment there is a refreshing rain falling, and the atmosphere is delightfully cool. This is the time of year when a man who has been taking life easy, if he is wise, takes stock. The farmer has laid by his crop and goes a visiting; the merchant says business is dull and goes on a little trip; the clerk gets off of the store and goes a fishing; and the individual who is writing this sees he has mighty little to write about and would like to go to sleep.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men which taken at the flood leads on to fortune," says the Bard of Avon. There is also a tide in the affairs of communities, and it certainly looks as if the tide had struck Clanton and we are riding on the crest of general improvement. Nothing speaks so well for a town as the evidence that its citizens are prospering and showing their prosperity by improving their dwelling houses and places of business.

The last two or three years has seen the erection of several elegant residences in different parts of town, and while we all deplore the heavy losses caused by the fire this year in the business part of Clanton, everyone acknowledges the new brick buildings are a decided improvement on the old wooden houses. Last week I named the buildings in progress and besides those then mentioned, W. E. Johnson is building an addition to her residence and painting the entire building. W. J. Wilson is guarding against fire by putting a tin roof on his store. E. L. Packard & Co., are painting their storehouse inside and out, Mr. Edwards is getting the brick material on the ground and intends to commence building his new brick store next week. T. A. Hardy also expects to commence his new brick building right away, as soon as Ben Teel gets through with the work he has in hand he will erect another of his handsome dwelling houses.

All these things point to the fact that Clanton is going right ahead, not with outside assistance, but by the energy of its citizens and with their own resources. They all recognize that now is the flood and are pushing their barks to the harbor of prosperity. New-comers are welcome if they are ready to put their shoulder to the wheel, there is room for all providing they are of the right sort.

And, by the by, Thorsby is also making great strides forward. The college building is going up rapidly, and a big new hotel is to be built opposite the depot, and several dwellings are in course of erection. Franzen & Olsen have dissolved partnership, and Mr. Franzen will continue the business with enlarged stock and increased facilities. Thorsby is also going to have a waterworks, and I wish Clanton was going to do as well in this direction. In case of fire a supply of water is invaluable.

THE PAN-AMERICAN

A Piece of Wonderful and Interesting Sights

The Progress and Resources of the Americas Illustrated and Exhibited.

I will endeavor to give a brief description of a few of the interesting features of this exposition in the hope of being of some information to my friends and patrons in Chilton county who are about to attend, and to encourage others to visit this interesting and instructive exhibition. To attempt to give a faithful description would be to invite failure more than half way.

However, the site of the Pan-American Exposition is an ideal one. It is on high ground and includes many acres of improved park lands. There is a wealth of foliage and hundreds of beds of flowers, interspersed with grassy glades and graveled walks.

The buildings, of which there are some twenty large ones for exhibits and about one hundred smaller ones, including state and foreign buildings, midway shows, etc., are radiant with color.

In the midst of these buildings is a tower four hundred and ten feet high, most beautiful in design and graceful in proportions. This is the Electric Tower, pictures and descriptions of which have made thousands of people eager to visit the exposition. Every visitor pauses in wonder and admiration before this splendid structure. From a niche in the face of the tower pours a great volume of water which is broken into spray by a deflector and falls upon broad ledges from which it flows into an immense basin, in which are several fountains, jets which rise to a great height. By day the scene is grand and inspiring. By night, when thousands of incandescent lights and a hundred searchlights illuminate the tower and its surroundings, the grandeur and inspiration are increased a thousand fold. It is a picture that must linger forever in the memory. While one stands entranced by the sight, the color everywhere changes to purple, and from that to red, and and to blue, to violet and to green. But the brilliant day and night scenes are not confined to the Electric Tower and its basin. One has to turn but half around to view another splendid sight, the Court of Fountains. Here the water projected into the air assumes various forms, and at night all are are under the play of varicolored electric lights. Nothing excelling this picture has even been created by man for the pleasure of his fellows.

Standing upon the Triumphal Bridge, which is itself an architectural masterpiece with massive pylons and grand sculptural groups, one gets a splendid view.

Beyond the Electric Tower, to the north is one of the choicest beauty spots, the Plaza. In the center is a band stand, from which the most celebrated bands, such as Sousa's' the Mexican government Infantry and Fanciulli's, give daily and evening concerts.

On the north are the monumental entrances to the Plaza from the railway station. On the east is the arched and towered entrance to the Stadium in which sports are held with a seating capacity of 12,000 souls.

On the west is a similar entrance to the midway, a place of unfounded interest for visitors. It is not only a place of amusement, but a great educator, affording as it does glimpses of life in many foreign lands. To describe this feature would require a "special article"—perhaps later.

Encircling the buildings is a grand canal on which can always be seen gondolas, electric launches, etc.

There is a fine natural lake in the grounds and it is always dotted with gay craft. In this lake rides at anchor the sloop "Spray" in which Capt. Joshua Slocum sailed around the world all alone. The Captain and his wife and son are on the sloop and receive and entertain visitors. On the shore of the lake is a U. S. Government life-saving station with a crew station here to give daily exhibitions of their work.

The electric Tower with elevators that run up 270 feet afford a grand outlook. Visitors who have Birthday Barbecue.

It has been the custom of Mr. Martin S. Bates for several years past to call his children and connection together and give them a big dinner on his birthday. Last Friday, July 26, being his 65th birthday. "Uncle Mart," as he is known, selected a place opposite the Rollifee Bates Island on the Coosa river. The writer having a hankering after barbecued sheep set out at break of day on 25th, after traveling four miles heard of Mr. Bates' daughter who married Mr. Jourdan, drove boldly up to the house; was met at the gate by Mr. Jourdan, who said "what do you want?" And by the way, he did not have the tone of voice to suit a man out for grub. My reply was, did you marry Uncle Mart's daughter? He said "yes, but I had to steal her." I told him Uncle Mart said I could get breakfast here, so he led the way to the dining room and from the big soft biscuits, large plate of ham, eggs and Peaberry coffee, I decided he had made a good steal. After I had paid my respects to the ham and eggs and was going in to the butter and honey, Uncle Mart was there and gently reminded me that he had a send down the road and he was sure we would get dinner and it was not healthy to eat much this hot weather. So on we went, Uncle Mart leading the way, we reached Mr. Rolifee Bates for dinner. The cattle and sheep being ready for the butcher, I was on the detail to select the ground to dig the pit, which we did in one of the most beautiful and shady places right on the banks of the Coosa river when the springs burst out to the hill side and empty their sparkling waters into the grand old Coosa when the red man years ago forded it on his pony.

Well, I can say the dinner was all that could be expected, plenty of everything to eat and smoke and some left. All Mr. Bates' family being present with their friends, I can truthfully say it was the nicest thing of the kind I ever witnessed, the grand old man surrounded by his children and grandchildren it was inspiring to me to see the old Christian that he is sit for a picture in a group of his kindred and offspring. May he live to repeat it many years. Yours,

W. W. WALLE.

ELANTON, - - - ALABAMA.

Medical men are now practically unanimous in the belief that nutritious food and plenty of fresh air and exercise will restore to health almost any sufferer from consumption, if this treatment is undertaken soon enough. And the dissemination of the disease can be largely, if not entirely, prevented by observing certain sanitary precautions. Unfortunately, however, the painstaking of educated and scrupulous persons is more than offset by the carelessness of the ignorant. Hence the necessity for enlightening the masses on the subject, says the New York Tribune.

Those who are to come after us are to make as much progress as we have made, or as those have made who went before us, and the lines along which that progress will move cannot now be predicted. For this reason, while it is desirable to build in a thoroughly safe manner, and to guard against all risks, especially those of fire, it is highly questionable whether it is desirable to construct buildings in such a solid manner that when a half century from this time it becomes necessary to either destroy them or radically alter them, the change will involve a great and unnecessary sacrifice to the owner, remarks the Boston Herald.

A writer in the Popular Science Monthly discusses the sterility of geniuses. The tendency of women of genius is to marry late in life. Of 819 British men of genius, twenty-eight per cent. never married, while the normal ratio of bachelors to the entire population is only ten per cent. The marriages of this class of men were unfruitful in about twenty per cent. of the total number of cases. This is much higher than the ratio of childless marriages in the middle and upper classes in Great Britain and the United States, which is placed at thirteen per cent. But the infertility of geniuses is compensated by their greater vitality, for they are proverbially long lived.

A writer in Nature, discussing the rise of the new chemical industry of producing artificial perfumes, makes a significant remark concerning the sense of smell in human beings. He declares that it is, as yet, wholly uncultured. "In walking through the country," he says, "we can rarely identify a particular odor caught until the sight of the plant from which it emanates makes us wonder at our hesitation." He suggests that the growth of the perfume industry, which results in the continual production of new odors, may lead to a cultivation of the neglected sense of smell, which may be capable of as artistic development as that which odor perception has attained.

Rubber has done a great deal for civilization, and civilization has done a great deal for rubber, but both are indebted to Charles Goodyear, hero and martyr, to whom the manufacturers of the United States should erect an ebonite monument as high as the shaft on Bunker Hill. "I believe," said Daniel Webster, in the famous patent suit in which he fought the good fight for Goodyear, "that Charles Goodyear is to go down to posterity in the history of the arts in this country in that great class of inventors at the head of which stands Robert Fulton, in which class stand the names of Whitney and Morse, and in which class will stand, not far removed, the humble name of Charles Goodyear."

In the old times Europe did not mind the riches of America; it seemed to the Old World that our millionaires came by their wealth in some crude way which could not possibly injure European industries or compete with them. American money enriched innkeepers and the worn-out sons of ancient and decrepit families, and that was the end of the matter. Three years ago it was no more suspected by the mass of Europeans, especially of continental Europeans, that we would soon be competing with their manufacturers than that we could knock Cervera's fleet to pieces in a short run along the southern coast of Cuba. There has come a wonderful change over the dream of Europe. It is clear to the most obtuse now that the United States is the greatest industrial power in the world, and that trade and industrial conditions in Europe must be changed in order to meet the new giant, observes Harper's Weekly.

ABOUT ALABAMA AFFAIRS

MAN FOUND MURDERED IN HIS MELON PATCH.

SERIOUS RAILROAD CROSSING ACCIDENT

Aldbama Oil Field — Boy Suicides at Opelika — Alabamian Drowned in Georgia— Tube Works—Shooting at Huntsville — Items.

A MYSTERY.

The body of Patrick Taff, a wealthy and well known citizen of Oak Grove, was found cold in death in a little house in his melon patch last Thursday morning. A post morten revealed the fact that the skull was fractured in four places, two in front and two behind. At the inquest, the weapon with which the murder was committed was produced. It was a heavy iron bolt, about two feet long, and having a square head. The stain of the victim's blood was plainly traced on the surface of the bolt. This bolt was found in the melon patch, about thirty feet from the shed in which the crime was committed. The deceased was unmarried and about 57 years of age. He had a general store and lived in the rear of store. He had accumulated considerable means. Among the keys taken from the body was the key to the store, but so far as can be ascertained the store was not entered by the assassin or assassins. It is believed to have been the intention to rob the store after killing the proprietor, but something is thought to have interfered with this plan. The affair has created a great deal of excitement in the neighborhood, and speculation is rife as to who committed the crime. No tangible clew has been found.

THE DEADLY CROSSING.

Early Thursday morning a freight train on the Louisville & Nashville railroad crashed into a street car on the Gate City line at East Birmingham and one person was killed instantly and several were more or less injured. At this point the view is obstructed on both sides by buildings and it is impossible for a motorman to see whether or not a train is approaching until his car is almost upon the track. When the car reached the crossing a freight train was passing and the car was stopped by the motorman until the train had cleared the track. When the train passed the motorman started ahead, not noticing another freight train directly behind the first, and before he could again bring his car to a stop the car and engine were in collision. The car was caught by the pilot of the engine and turned around and it then toppled over on its side.

ONLY ONE IN THE SOUTH.

The company which has purchased the old Helena rolling mills and will make extensive improvements on the site of that plant is known as the Alabama Tube and Iron Company, and it is stated that this concern will conduct a rolling mill and will manufacture tubing. The new buildings are to cost a large amount of money, as they are to be in every way modern and convenient. The tubing machinery, along with the buildings for it will, be entirely new and will represent an outlay of several thousand dollars. The concern will employ a large number of men. It is believed that within ninety days the mills will be in operation and placing finished iron ore on the market and before long after that the new buildings will have been completed and the tubing department about ready to start.

GIRARD CITIZEN DROWNED.

Heath Blanchard, a prominent citizen of Girard, was drowned in the Chattahoochee river, three miles above Columbus, Ga., Saturday afternoon. He and a companion, Bunk Newberry, were fishing and waded out into the river at a swift place. Blanchard started across and was swept away.

A HAIL storm in Russia, July 23d, destroyed the crops over a wide area. Three men and many cattle were killed, while an entire flock of sheep and two shepherds were carried off by the flood. Some of the hail stones weighed three pounds.

WHOLESALE DRUGS.

A new wholesale drug house is to be established in Birmingham in October. It is to be a stock company and the gentleman who will be at the head of it is one of the oldest and best known drug men in the South, Mr. J. T. Forester, of Greenville, S. C.

JERMAN Riesco has been chosen president of Chili.

ALABAMA OIL.

Major John N. Otley, the geologist employed to examine the holdings of the Russellville Oil and Gas company, has submitted his report to the company. Otley is considered one of the foremost geologists in the United States, he having located the celebrated Beaumont, Texas, oil fields. He says the indications are so pointed that the question of securing oil in paying quantities is very secondary. The structural arrangement is such that the pools are necessarily broad and when the catastrophes have been sufficient, but not too violent, deep pools may be anticipated. Since the receipt of this report the company has decided to go actively to work and begin developing its 40,000 acres of land.

SHE LAID HIM UP.

There was a serious cutting affray in the weaving room of the Dwight Manufacturing Company, at Gadsden, Friday, in which a young woman badly injured a young man. Miss Willie Sapp went to the loom where a Mrs. Resson was working and upbraided her for something she was charged with saying about her. A row ensued whereupon Tom Resson came to his mother's aid and struck Miss Sapp on the head with a spindle, making a bad wound. Miss Sapp drew her knife and slashed Tom on the left arm and shoulder. Resson struck her again and ran, but fell down. Miss Sapp jumped on him, caught up his foot and cut him from the knee down, laying the flesh open to the bone and severing a large artrey, from which Resson came near bleeding to death.

A NEW INDUSTRY.

Bids for excavating the grounds for the new shops of the Southern Car and Foundry Company to be located at Ensley have been opened, and the contract was awarded by President Elliott and Engineer Alford to the firm of Dunn & Lallande Brothers of Birmingham. The contract calls for the removal of more than eighty thousand yards of dirt and rock, and it amounts to a large sum. The capacity of this new plant will be twenty finished cars a day. Ten of this number will be iron and ten wood. Work will be pushed forward rapidly.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS.

Cook Springs is booming. Captain A. F. Lucas, the oil king, and two companies are in the field leasing and taking options on all of the land they can get. The companies are New York and Mobile people and have plenty of capital behind them. Operations will begin in the near future. Cook Springs is a health resort, and the outlook is very flattering. If the oil is found in as large quantities as Captain Lucas expects, people will not only go there for health, but to invest in property.

CONFEDERATE REUNION.

The Confederate reunion held at Lafayette Saturday drew a large crowd. General William C. Oates delivered a magnificent address. His oration dealt with history and with reminiscences and was frequently applauded. This was the first day since the Convention has been in session that General Oates was absent. Hon. J. T. Heflin presided.

Fire Saturday noon destroyed the residence of Chas. F. White in Troy. But for prompt work by the department the fire might have burned several other residences.

AT TWO GIRLS.

John Edwards, a young Dallas mill employe, fired three shots from a shot gun at two girls in West Huntsville Friday. The girls were frightened by Edwards, and as they ran away from him he fired, wounding one girl in the hand. The shooting was witnessed by a hundred people on an electric car.

At the preliminary the marksman was fined $35.

IT IS NEEDED.

Birmingham is to have a wholesale paper house within a short while. Mr. J. W. McClelland, of Atlanta, Ga., is looking for a location.

A YOUNG SUICIDE.

Will C. Daffin, 17 years old, son of W. R. Daffin, a prominent merchant, of Opelika, committed suicide Saturday night by shooting himself through the head with a pistol. He had been talking with his mother and went to his room, locked the door and in a few moments the sound of the pistol was heard. He died instantly. No cause for the deed is known.

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

Further Report of Alabama's Constitutional Convention.

Fifty-second Day.

Suffrage Committee Report Under Discussion—Three Sections of the Article Adopted.

One hundred and one and 105 was the attendance today.

Mr. Lowe introduced a suffrage scheme of eleven sections, which was offered as a substitute for the majority report of the committee.

General Sanford introduced an ordinance to empower the state to construct by convict labor a canal from Birmingham to the Warrior river. Also an ordinance to limit the holding of lands by corporations to 1000 acres without permission of the legislature.

An effort was made to reconsider section 59 of the legislative article which prevents the legislature from remitting debts due the state from individuals or corporations.

The suffrage committee report was then taken up, Judge Coleman, chairman of the committee, making a short introductory speech.

The following sections were adopted:

Sec. 1. Every male citizen of this state who is a citizen of the United States, 21 years old or upwards, not laboring under any disabilities named in this article, and possessing the qualifications required by it, and every foreign born male citizen who has declared his intention of becoming a citizen and shall have resided in the state five years, shall be an elector, and shall be entitled to vote at any election by the people.

Section 2. To entitle a person to vote at any election by the people he shall have resided in the state at least two years in the county one year and in the precinct or ward three months immediately preceding the election at which he offers to vote, and he shall have been duly registered as an elector and shall have paid on or before the first day of February next preceding the date of the election at which he offers to vote all poll taxes due from him for the year 1901 and for each subsequent year provided that any elector who, within three months next preceding the date of the election at which he offers to vote has removed from one precinct or ward to another precinct or ward in the same county, incorporated town or city, shall have the right to vote in the precinct or ward from which he has so removed if he would have been entitled to vote in such precinct or ward but for such removal.

Section 3. All elections by the people shall be by ballot, and that elections by persons in a representative capacity shall be viva voce.

Section 4 was under discussion when the time for adjournment arrived.

Fifty-third Day.

Oratory is Now the Rule at the Sessions—The Granddaddy Clause Is the Whole Cause.

One hundred and seven delegates were present this morning and a dozen more this afternoon. Mr. O'Neill, of Jefferson, offered a resolution authorizing the legislature to provide for electors expressing their choice for United States senator.

The discussion of the suffrage article was resumed. Those who spoke in favor were Judge Walker, who made an able speech, and Messrs. O'Neal and Heflin. Those who opposed the grandfather clause were Governor Oates, Mr. Dent, Mr. Freeman, a republican, Mr. Banks and Mr. Lowe, who pleaded for fair elections.

Fifty-fourth Day.

Interest Centers About the Grandaddy Clause—A Day of Oratory—No New Business.

One hundred and six and 130 was the attendance today. For the first time neither ordinance nor resolution was offered. Mr. White and Mr. Weatherly spoke on the suffrage clause, the former attacking, the latter supporting it. Mr. Knox will speak tomorrow.

Fifty-fifth Day.

More Oratory on the Suffrage Clause—Mr. Knox Speaks For it—Corporation Committee Reports.

One hundred and nineteen were present this morning and 186 in the evening. The committee on corporations submitted its report, the principal changes made in the present law are that the legislature is requested to pass general laws for the creation of corporations. Foreign corporations are required to file copies of their charters with the secretary of state. Corporations cannot use the streets of a city for wires, pipes, etc., without the consent of the municipal authorities. It makes the acceptance of free passes by an official a misdemeanor and ground for impeachment.

President Knox spoke in favor of the suffrage report as did some others. The rest of the day was spent in oratory.

Fifty-sixth Day.

No Quorum—Nothing but Oratory—Will Vote on Suffrage Plan On Next Tuesday.

Only 72 delegates answered to roll call at the one session held today. Late arrivals however numbered enough for business. The entire session was spent in debating the grandfather clause. Speeches were made in favor of the majority report by Dr. Cunningham of Jefferson, Mr. Watts of Montgomery and Mr. Martin, of Calhoun. Mr Spears, of St. Clair, a republican delegate, spoke against the entire plan. The convention will devote all of Monday to oratory on this question, and take a vote at 12 o'clock Tuesday on the grandfather clause.

Fifty-seventh Day.

The Last Day of Speech Making—Interest in the Suffrage Clause at Low Ebb—Final Vote.

There were 91 delegates on hand this morning to hear the last day's speeches anent the suffrage clause and in the afternoon one had apparently lost interest as only 90 appeared. The entire day was spent in oratory and there were only about a dozen spectators. The principal speakers were Messrs. Blackwell, Sollie, Ashcraft and Miller. One republican, Mr. Porter, spoke against the clause.

AFTER A FRANCHISE.

Gentlemen at the head of a company proposing to build an electric railway line from Pratt City, via Ensley, Dolomite and Brighton to Bessemer, have applied for a franchise. Those interested have plenty of money, and the road, if built, will prove a paying investment, as it will pass almost continuously through a thickly-settled district.

GADSDEN'S CITY RAILWAY.

A new company has purchased the electric car line from Gadsden to Attalla, and the power house and equipments. The line will be consolidated with the Gadsden Light, Ice and Coal Company, under the name of the Alabama City, Gadsden and Attalla Railroad Company. The public is promised first-class accomodations.

CAUGHT IN THE WHEELS.

Gilbert Freeman, son of Mr. Ed. Freeman, a prominent citizen of Russellville, got caught under the wheels of a steam shovel Friday morning and had his foot terribly mangled. The young man was working with the shovel gang at the mines, and in some manner failed to hear or see the signal to move the shovel up.

We all have reason to be proud of the tribute paid to the American troops in Pekin when they withdrew the other day from the quarter of the city of which they had charge, observes Life. The Chinamen who had lived under their authority held a mass meeting and begged them not to go. Numbers of petitions to the same effect, signed by many signers, were sent in to General Chaffee. They availed nothing, for there is only a legation guard of American troops left in Pekin now. But the feelings of the Chinese about our men were a splendid tribute to our army and to American spirit. Our dealings in China from beginning to end have been something to be thankful for. Individual misconduct there may of course have been, but the purposes of our Government have been wise, humane and noble, and have been admirably carried out.

Speaking of suggestion and hypnotism, the Lancet refers to the case of a nurse who suffered from a mania of destructiveness, but who was unscrupulous enough to suggest to her charge, a little girl aged seven years, that the latter should confess to the misdeeds. During nine months the little girl voluntarily made herself the scapegoat, confessed to being the wrongdoer, and voluntarily bore every punishment without ever betraying her nurse.

Free Trade With Porto Rico Established—Mrs. McKinley in a Lawsuit — The Samoan Situation Controversy—Other Items.

While it directs that "the matter" of Admiral Schley's services during the operations in West Indian waters shall be investigated it selects certain acts of the war and concerning the facts and principles which it calls for particular attention. These points cover briefly Admiral Schley's alleged delay with the flying squadron at Clenfuegos, the retrograde movement toward the West, the effectiveness of the bombardment of the Spanish batteries, the ranges used in the recent engagement of May 31, the loop of the Brooklyn at Santiago, and the accuracy of official reports.

The president has issued a proclamation establishing free trade between Porto Rico and the United States, and declaring the organization of a civil government for the island. The proclamation is purely formal, only in the body of the document adopted by the Porto Rican legislature heretofore published, does it appear that the island is set free commercially today in commemoration of the anniversary of the planting of the American flag on the island. The proclamation is headed: "Cessation to Be Porto Rico."

It recites that the act of April 12, 1900 (otherwise known as the Foraker act) provides that whenever the Porto Rican legislature has enacted and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the needs of the government and by reason so notified the president, the latter shall issue a proclamation and all duties on goods passing between the United States and Porto Rico shall cease. As the legislature has complied with that requirement of the act in terms set out in the resolutions which are quoted in full in the body of the proclamation, the document says:

"Therefore, I, William McKinley, President of the United States, in pursuance of the provisions of the laws above quoted and upon the foregoing due notification, do hereby issue my proclamation, and do declare and make known that a civil government for Porto Rico has been organized in accordance with the provisions of said act of Congress.

"And I do further declare and make known that the legislative assembly of Porto Rico has enacted and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of the government of Porto Rico.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Washington this 25th day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and one, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-sixth.

The Fight For Mortal Existence Is One Continual Struggle.

HARD TO KEEP EVEN WITH THE WORLD

The Ups and Downs of Life Are Many. Touches Upon Anniversary of Battle of Manassas.

Life is a continual struggle—a struggle to better our condition—to keep even with the world or to get a little ahead—a struggle to pay these darn little past debts, as Sam McCamy used to call them—a struggle to raise up and educate a family of children to gratify their reasonable desires and keep them hailing distance of society. The average young married man has visions of getting rich, but by the time three or four children come along his ambition is to keep even. The struggle is on him. A young mother has no ambition to get rich but she does want her children to rank with the best at home and abroad, at church and school and picnics and parties. She doesn't mind living in a cottage but must have some nice furniture in the parlor and the hall where visitors are went to come. When things get old and familiar she hints at a new carpet or a large square rug or some lace curtains hanging from gilded bars over the windows something that is new and up to date and her room needs renovating with the three P's—paint, plaster, paint and paper. Why shouldn't she? That room is her home, or it is her prison in some cases. She has to sit in it and sew in it and nurse in it every day and her critical eye sees every sign of decay. Every spider web and fly speck and the lamp smoke on the ceiling, every worn place in the carpet or rug or the mitting, and every broken glass or hole in the plaster that the children have made. A good mother can't raise her children without some wear and tear of furniture and finery. It should never be forgotten by the young husband that it is woman's nature to love ornament and beautiful things. It was for her that God made the flowers and clothed the earth with grass and birds to sing and studded the heavens with stars. The average man cares but little for these things, and is all absorbed in the success of his business, whatever it is. If he had been made alone there would have been no birds but buzzards, no flowers but dog fennel.

"The world was sad—the garden was a wild,
And man the hermit sighed till woman smiled."

But the struggle is on him—the struggle to maintain and please the wife and the children. The responsibility is his and he feels it, for the rearing of a family in a respectable way is the biggest undertaking in this life. He can't do this and get rich honestly, and he should not wish to. Riches generally dwarf a man in his better emotions and prove a curse to his children. Of course, a very shrewd man can get rich if he will make a hog of himself—if he will do as the rich miser said he did—"buy nothing that you are obliged to have."

The ambition of every man and woman is to better their condition if possible. This is laudable and right. When I was young there was no glass window to our little bedroom—only a shutter; no cooking stove, no lamp light, no steel pens or matches, no store clothes nor sewing machines, but in a few years my father bettered his condition and built a better house and gave his children a good education and then I married and bettered my condition and my wife and I undertook to raise a flock of children on a higher plane than we had been raised on. We have succeeded pretty well, but it has been a struggle, especially since the war. It is hard to keep even. There are so many new inventions, new attractions that lessen labor or give pleasure that the temptation is very great, and a liberal man is liable to get in the fix of the old fellow who said he was about even with the world and was ready to die, for he owed about as many as he dident owe.

It is these fixed charges that keep a man ever embarrassed. Fixed charges! That is what the railroad companies call them—expenses that are regular every month and do not vary. I was ruminating about the fixed charges in almost every aspiring family in a town or city. My own for example. There are taxes and fire insurances, say $120 per annum, or $10 a month; water $10; gas, $3.50; telephone, $1.50; milk, $15; washing, $5; church and Sunday school, $4; newspapers, $1; wood and coal, $8; ice, say $1 for an average; postage and box rent, $2. Now, all these make $68.50 of fixed charges per month, not including cost of keeping a horse and a cow, and there is 5 per cent for annual repairs on the dwelling. And so much more than half of the income goes for fixed charges that seem to be unavoidable. Of course we can dismiss the cook and do without the telephone, but we do not wish to, for both are great comforts, especially when company comes. We have long since dismissed the horse and cow. Now, where do the food and clothing come from, for it takes more for the unfixed things than the fixed. Then there is something

When things get worn she hints at a new carpet or rug or some lace curtains from gilded bars over the windows, something that is new and her room needs with the three "p's" paint and paper. Why that room is her prison in some cases. She has to stay in it and sew in it every day and her health is a sign of decay—she hardly speaks and finally, seeing every carpet or rug or the matting all worn, broken glass or out, and the children have no place to play, she murmurs and can't raise money for some wear and finery. It should be the young husband's nature to love these things. It made the flowers and birds, with grass and trees and the heavens with clouds. Average man cares for these things, and is all absorbed in the business of his business. If he had been made a child, he would have been no home but barracks, no flowers but dog fennel.

"The world was sad—the garden was a wild,

But the struggle is on him—the struggle to maintain and please the wife and the children. The responsibility is his and he feels it, for the rearing of a family in a respectable way is the object of undertaking in this life. He wants to do this and get rich honestly and he should not wish to. Riches should not dwarf a man in his better emotions and prove a curse to his children. As a rule, any shrewd man can make money and will make a hog of himself if he will do as the rich miser does, saving nothing that he can get and hoarding nothing that he can not get hold to have.

The ambition of every man and woman is to better their condition if possible. This is laudable and right. When I was young there was no glass window in the little bedroom—only a shutter, no cooking stove, no lamp light, no steel pens or matches, no store clothes nor sewing machines, but in a few years my father bettered his condition and built a better house and gave his children a good education, and then I married and bettered my condition and my wife and I undertook to raise a flock of children on a higher plane than we had been raised on. It is these fixed charges that keep a man ever embarrassed. Fixed charges! That is what the railroad companies call their expenses that are regular every month and do not vary. I was thinking about the fixed charges in almost every aspiring family in a town or city. My own for example. There are taxes and fire insurances, say $120 per annum or $10 a month; water, $1; gas $75; telephone, $1.50; meat, $5; washing $5; church and Sunday school, $1; newspapers, $1; wood and coal, $5; ice, say $1 for an average; postage and box rent, $2. Now all these make $46.50 of fixed charges per month, not including cost of keeping a horse and a cow, and there is 5 per cent for annual repairs on the dwelling. And so much more than half of the income goes for fixed charges that seem to be unavoidable. Of course we can dismiss the cook and do without the telephone, but we do not wish to, for both are great comforts, especially when company comes. We have long since dismissed the horse and cow. Now, where do the food and clothing come from, for it takes more for the unfixed things than the fixed. Then there is something wanted almost every day for charity. Book agents come almost every day and excite our sympathy, but we have long since cut off that expense. One came yesterday that had General Miles for one of the editors. It shouldent stay in my house. Those northern publishers seem to think we have no feeling—no resentment—and they seek to shove "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and other frauds upon us, and some of our fool people swallow the bait. Why don't they buy Dr. Curry's book or "Raphael Semmes" or "Percy Grey" or some book that has fewer pictures and more truth.

But, blessings on the good, old-fashioned country people, who have no fixed charges to pay—none hardly, and the unfixed are not bought from the butcher or the baker, nor are the dry goods altogether regulated by the fashions of the town or city. They raise their own supplies of flour and meal and lard and chickens and eggs. When company comes they call up Sinda and tell her she will have to kill another chicken, and that is all of it. Of course, they must buy sugar and coffee, but they make their own jellies and jam and peach pickles from their own fruit and can beat Dio Lewis on cherry tarts and apple dumplings and chicken pie. Just go to a farmers' club one time, if you would know what these substantial country people can do in the way of a picnic.

But I like company, and when it comes it is a real pleasure to spread before them a feast of good things and finish up with ice cream and cake. I like such things myself and am sure to get them when company comes, for my wife came from the old-fashioned stock that always echoed the militia captain's order when he exclaimed to his men: "Tention, company!" Pay attention to your company.

When Napoleon was in Egypt and about to fight the great battle of the Pyramids he addressed his troops and said, "Soldiers' forty centuries are looking down upon you from the heights of those Pyramids." And so we may say to the veterans of 1861, "Soldiers' forty years are looking down upon you from the heights of Manassas. Forty years ago from the 21st of this July was fought the great battle of the civil war. It was Sunday then, and it is Sunday now. To those engaged in it that battle seemed to be the greatest of the war. It was the first and made the deepest impression, for our boys had never been in a fight and did not know what they could do. Not one in fifty had ever been in service, against an enemy, but they were ready and eager for the battle, and on that day they avenged the wrongs of half a century—and proved themselves heroes and patriots. For weeks old Joe Johnston had been playing battle-door and shuttle-cock with Patterson between Winchester and Harper's Ferry. One day Patterson would give a dare as far as Charlestown and fall back without a fight. Another day Johnston would give a dare as far as Buckletown and fall back without a fight. Our boys were discouraged. But when the order came to march to Manassas they knew they were to join Beauregard and fight. Every order was whispered—not a drum was beaten—not a wagon allowed to move. The campfires were left burning and only Kirby Smith was left behind with his brigade to play with Patterson and keep him from finding out the army had gone. But Kirby slipped off later, taking the cars at Strasburg, and he got to Manassas just in time for the fight. Patterson was left behind without a foe, but he never found it out till Saturday night—too late—too late to follow and help McDowell.

That night march will never be forgotten—that fording the broad and beautiful Shenandoah by torch light—the boys up to their armpits and holding up their guns to keep their powder dry. It took four hours to make that crossing, for men move slow and cautiously in shoaly waters, but by sunrise they were eighteen miles from Winchester and by Friday night they were near the battle ground and McDowell did not know it. That was military strategy. That was old Joe's plan—the wyllest fox that ever faced or fooled a foe. This is a fighting day for the veterans to sing his requiem.—Bill Arp, in Atlanta Constitution.

The wealth of the United States is computed every 10 years from the census returns. The total wealth in 1850 was put at $7,135,780,228, or $308 per capita, and in 1870 at $30,068,518,507, or $780 per capita. This amount rose in 1880 to $43,642,000,000, or $870 per capita, and again in 1890 to $65,037,091,197, or $1036 per capita. Expert statisticians estimate that the amount for 1900 will be at least $90,000,000,000, or nearly $1200 per capita. When it is considered that the latter amount represents accumulated savings of $6000, or nearly four times the average of 1850, for every family of five persons, it is evident that the world is growing rich at an astonishing rate under the operation of machine production, states C. A. Conant, in the World's Work.

How are the mighty fallen in interest. A little less than nineteen years ago the papers gave columns to Arabi Pacha. Today three lines are enough in which to announce his "repatriation" after eighteen years of exile in British keeping in Ceylon.

ORIGIN OF FAMILIAR PHRASES.

Well-Known Expressions That Have Started in the Most Natural Way.

To feel in apple-pie order is a phrase which dates back to Puritan times—to a certain Hepzibah Merton. It seems that every Saturday she was accustomed to bake two or three dozen apple pies, which were to last her family through the coming week. These she placed, carefully on her pantry shelves, labelled for each day in the week, so that Tuesday's pies might not be confused with Thursday's, nor those presumably large or intended for washing and sweeping days eaten when household labors were lighter. Aunt Hepzibah's "apple-pie order" settlement, and originated the well-known saying.

It was once customary in France, when a guest had outstayed his welcome, for the host to serve a cold shoulder of mutton instead of a hot roast. This was the origin of the phrase "To give the cold shoulder."

"None shall wear a feather but he who has killed a Turk" was an old Hungarian saying, and the number of feathers in his cap indicated how many Turks the man had killed. Hence the origin of the saying with refernce to a feather in one's cap.

In one of the battles between the Russians and Tartars a private soldier of the former cried out: "Captain, I've caught a Tartar!" "Bring him along, then," answered the officer. "I can't for he won't let me," was the response. Upon investigation it was apparent that the captured had the captor by the arm and would not release him. So, "catching a Tartar" is applicable to one who has found an antagonist too powerful for him.

That far from an elegant expression, "To kick the bucket," is believed to have originated in the time of Queen Elizabeth, when a shoemaker named Hawkins committed suicide by placing a bucket on a table in order to raise himself high enough to reach a rafter above, then kicking away the bucket on which he stood. The term coroner is derived from the word "corph-connor," which means corpse inspector.

"He's a brick," meaning a good fellow, originated with a king of Sparta—Agesilaus—about the fourth century B. C. A visitor at the Lacedaemonian capital was surprised to find the city without walls or means of defence, and asked his royal host what they would do in case of an invasion by a foreign power. "Do?" replied the heroic king. "Why, Sparta has 50,000 soldiers, and each man is a brick."

When the Horse guards parade in St. James' park, London, there is always a lot of boys on hand to black the boots of the soldiers or do other menial work. The boys, from their constant attendance about the time of guard mounting, were nicknamed "the black guards," hence the name "blackguard." Deadhead, as denoting one who has free entrance to places of amusement, comes from Pompeii, where the checks for free admission were small ivory death's heads. Specimens of these are in the museum at Naples.

One of Nature's Workshops.

In an island in the Lake of Bombon is the remarkable Taal volcano, which is readily accessible from Manila, writes a correspondent in the New York Herald. Its central crater is oval in shape, a mile and a quarter across the greatest diameter, and has within its rim two lakes of hot water, one yellow and the other green, and a small active cone 50 feet in height, from which escape steam and sulphuric gases. The strange colors of the waters are due to the presence of chemicals evolved in subterranean laboratories. The greatest eruption of Taal took place in 1754, wiping out four villages. Apparently the volcanic ash lends wonderful fertility to the soil, and presently a new growth of bamboo and palms appears where desolation had reigned.

The flags to be hoisted at one time in signaling at sea never exceeded four. It is an interesting arithmetical fact, that, with 18 various colored flags, and never more than four at a time, no fewer than 78,642 signals can be given.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

DISCOURSE BY THE EMINENT DIVINE LAST SUNDAY.

Subject: Sin in High Places—The Same Law of Right and Wrong Should Apply to Both Rich and Poor—Fascination of Fraud.

[Copyright 1901.]

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In this discourse Dr. Talmage shows that there is a tendency to excuse brilliant faults, because they are brilliant, when the same law of right and wrong ought to be applied to high places and low; text, Daniel iv. 33, "The same hour was the thing fulfilled upon Nebuchadnezzar, and he was driven from men and did eat grass as oxen."

Here is the mightiest of the Babylonish Rings. Look at him. He did more for the grandeur of the capital than did all his predecessors or successors. Hanging gardens, reservoirs, aqueducts, palaces, all of his own planning. The bricks that are brought up to-day from the ruins of Babylon have his name on them, "Nebuchadnezzar, son of Nabopolassor, king of Babylon." He was a great conqueror. He stretched forth his spear toward a nation, and it surrendered. But he plundered the temple of the true God. He lifted an idol, Bel Merodach, and compelled the people to bow down before it, and if they refused they must go through the redhot furnace or be crunched by lion or lioness. So God pulled him down.

He was smitten with what physicians call lycanthropy, and fancied that he was a wild beast, and he went out and pastured amid the cattle. God did not excuse him because he had committed the sin in high places or because the transgression was wide resounding. He measured Nebuchadnezzar in high place just as he would measure the humblest captive.

But in our time, you know as well as I, that there is a disposition to put a halo around iniquity if it is committed in conspicuous places, and if it is wide resounding and of large proportions. Ever and anon there has been an epidemic of crime in high places, and there is not a State or a city and hardly a village which has not been called to look upon astounding forgery, or an absconding bank cashier or president, or the wasting of trust fund or swindling mortgages. I propose, in carrying out the suggestion of my text, as far as I can, to scatter the fascinations around iniquity and show you that sin is sin and wrong is wrong, whether in high place or low place, and that it will be dealt with by that God who dealt with impaliaced Nebuchadnezzar.

All who preach feel that two kinds of sermons are necessary—the one on the faith of the gospel, the other on the morality of the gospel—and the one is just as important as the other, for you know that in this land to-day there are hundreds of men hiding behind the communion tables and in churches of Jesus Christ who have no business to be there as professors of religion. They expect to be all right with God, although they are all wrong with man. And, while I want you to understand that by the deeds of the law no flesh living can be justified and a mere honest life cannot enter us into heaven, I want you as plainly to understand that unless the life is right the heart is not right—grace in the heart and grace in the life. So we must preach sometimes the faith of the gospel and sometimes the morality of the gospel.

It seems to me there has not been a time in the last fifty years when this latter truth needed more thoroughly to be presented in the American churches. It needs to be presented to-day.

Look upon all the fascinations thrown around fraud in this country. You know for years men have been made heroes of and pictorialized and in various ways presented to the public, as though sometimes they were worthy of admiration, if they have scattered the funds of banks or swallowed great estates that did not belong to them. Our young men have been dazed with this quick accumulation. They have said: "That's the way to do it. What's the use of plodding on with small wages or insignificant salary when we may go into business life and with some stratagem achieve such a fortune as that man has achieved?" A different measure has been applied to the crime of Wall street from that which has been applied to the spoils which the man carries up Rat alley.

So a peddler came down from New England many years ago, took hold of the money market of New York, flaunted his abominations in the sight of all the people and defied public morals every day of his life. Young men looked up and said: "He was a peddler in one decade, and in the next decade he is one of the monarchs of the stock market. That's the way to do it." To this day the evil influence of that profligate financier has been felt, and within the past few weeks he has had conspicuous imitators.

There has been an irresistible impression going abroad among young men that the poorest way to get money is to earn it. The young man of flaunting cravat says to the young man of humble apparel: "What! You only get $1800 a year? Why, that wouldn't keep me in pin money. I spend $5000 a year." "Where do you get it?" asks the plain young man. "Oh, stocks, enterprises, all that sort of thing, you know." The plain young man has hardly enough money to pay his board, has to wear clothes after they are out of fashion and deny himself all luxuries. After awhile he gets tired of his plodding, and he goes to the man who has achieved suddenly large estate, and he says, "Just show me how it is done." And he is shown. He soon learns how, although he is almost all the time idle now and has resigned his position in the bank or the factory or the store he has more money than he ever had, trades off his old silver watch for a gold one with a flashing chain, sets his hat a little further over on the side of his head than he ever did, smokes better cigars and more of them. He has his hand in. Now, if he can escape the penitentiary for three or four years he will get into political circles, and he will get political jobs and will have something to do with harbors and pavements and docks. Now he has got so far along he is safe for perdition.

It is quite a long road sometimes for a man to travel before he gets into the romance of crime. Those are caught who are only in the prosaic stage of it. If the sheriffs and constables would only leave them alone a little while they would steal as well as anybody. They might not be able to steal a whole railroad, but they could master a load of pig iron.

Now, I always thank God when I find an estate like that go to smash. It is plague struck, and it blasts the nation. I thank God when it goes into such a wreck it can never be gathered up again. I want it to become so loathsome and such an insufferable stench that honest young men will take warning.

If God should put into money or its representative the capacity to go to its lawful owner, there would not be a bank or a safety deposit in the United States whose walls would not be blown out, and mortgages would rip and parchments would rend, and gold would shoot, and beggars would get on horseback, and stock gamblers would go to the almshouse.

How many dishonesties in the making out of invoices, and in the plastering of false labels, and in the fleecing of customers of rival houses, and in the making and breaking of contracts. Young men are indoctrinated in the idea that the sooner they get money the better, and the getting of it on a larger scale only proves to them their greater ingenuity. There is a glitter thrown around all these things. Young men have got to find out that God looks upon sin in a very different light.

And remember that the man who gets his gain by iniquity will soon lose it all. One moment after his departure from life he will not own an opera house, he will not own a certificate of stock, he will not own one dollar of Government securities, and the poorest boy that stands on the street with a penny in his pocket looking at the funeral procession of the dead chief as it goes by will have more money than that man who one week previous boasted that he controlled the money market.

So there has been a great deal of fascination thrown around libertinism. Society is very severe upon the impurity that lurks around the alleys and low haunts of the town. The law pursues it, smites it, incarcerates it, tries to destroy it.

You know as well as I that society becomes lenient in proportion as impurity becomes affluent or is in elevated circles, and finally society is silent or disposed to palliate.

Where is the judge, the jury, the police officer that dare arraign the wealthy libertine? He walks the streets; he rides the parks; he flaunts his iniquity in the eyes of the pure.

Sometimes it seems to me as if society were going back to the state of morals of Herculaneum, when it sculptured its vileness on pillars and temple wall and nothing but the lava of a burning mountain could hide the immensity of crime. At what time God will rise up and extirpate these evils upon society I know not nor whether He will do it by fire or hurricane or earthquake, but a holy God, I do not think, will stand it much longer. I believe the thunderbolts are hissing hot, and that when God comes to chastise the community for these sins, against which He has uttered Himself more bitterly than against any other, the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah will be tolerable as compared with the fate of our modern society, which knew better, but did worse.

We want about 10,000 pulpits in America to thunder, "All adulterers and whoremongers shall have their place in the hell that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." It is hell on earth and hell forever. We have got to understand that iniquity on Columbia Heights or Fifth avenue or Beacon Hill is as damnable in the sight of God as it is in the slums.

Whether it has canopied couch or eider-down or dwells amid the putridity of a low tenement house, God is after it in His vengeance. Yet the pulpit of the Christian church has been so cowed down on this subject that it hardly dares speak, and men are almost apologetic when they read the Ten Commandments.

Then look at the fascinations thrown around assassination. There are in all communities men who have taken the lives of others unlawfully, not as executioners of the law, and they go scot free. You say that they had their provocations. God gave life, and He alone has a right to take it, and He may take it by visitation of Providence or by an executioner of the law, who is His messenger. But when a man assumes that divine prerogative he touches the lowest depth of crime.

Society is alert for certain kinds of murder. If a citizen going along the road at night is waylaid and slain by a robber, we all want the villain arrested and executed. For all garroting, for all beating out of life by a club or an axe or a slungshot, the law has quick spring and heavy stroke, but you know that when men get affluent and high position and they avenge their wrongs by taking the lives of others great sympathy is excited. Lawyers plead, ladies weep, judge halts, jury is bribed, and the man goes free. If the verdict happen to be against him a new trial is called on through some technicality, and they adjourn for witnesses that never come and adjourn and adjourn until the community has forgotten all about it, and then the prison door opens and the murderer goes free.

Now, if capital punishment be right I say let the life of the polished murderer go with the life of the vulgar assassin. Let us have no partiality of gallows, no aristocracy of electrocution chair. Do not let us float back to barbarism, when every man was his own judge, jury and executioner, and that man had the supremacy who had the sharpest knife and the strongest arm and the quickest step and the stealthiest revenge. He who wilfully and in hatred takes the life of another is a murderer, I care not what the provocation or the circumstances.

He may be cleared by an enthusiastic courtroom, he may be sent by the Government of the United States as Minister to some foreign court or modern literature may polish the crime until it looks like heroism, but in the sight of God murder is murder, and the judgment day will so reveal it.

Now, do not be fascinated by the glamor thrown over crime of whatever sort. Because others have habits that seem brilliant, but yet at the same time are wicked, do not choose such faults. Stand independent of all such influences. Put your confidence in the Lord God. He will be your strength. "Vengeance is mine. I will repay, saith the Lord."

Cultivate old fashioned honesty. This book is full of it. Old fashioned honesty such as was spoken of by Dr. Livingstone, the famous explorer. You may not know he was descended from the Highlanders. Dr. Livingstone said that one day one of the old Highlanders called his children around him and said: "Now, my lads, I have looked all through our family line. I have gone back as far as I can, and I find that all our ancestors were honest people. There doesn't seem to be one rogue among them, and you have good blood. Now, my lads, be honest."

There are hundreds of young men who have good blood. Shall I ask three or four plain questions? Are your habits as good as when you left your father's house? Have you a good ticket in your pocket? Have you a fraudulent document? Have you been experimenting to see how accurate an imitation you could make of your employer's signature? Oh, you have good blood. Remember your father's prayers. Remember your mother's example. Turn not in an evil way. Have you been going astray? Come back. Have you ventured out too far?

As I stand in pulpits looking over audiences sometimes my heart fails me. There are so many tragedies present, so many who have sacrificed their integrity, so many far away from God. Why, my brother, there have been too many prayers offered for you to have you go overboard. And there are those venturing down into sin, and my heart aches to call them back.

At Brighton Beach or Long Branch you have seen men go down into the surf to bathe, and they waded out farther and farther, and you got anxious about them. You said, "I wonder if they can swim?" And you then stood and shouted: "Come back! Come back! You will be drowned!" They waved their hand back, saying: "No danger." They kept on wading deeper down and farther out from shore until after awhile a great wave with a strong undertow took them out, their corpses the next day washed on the beach. So I see men wading down into sin farther and farther, and I call to them: "Come back! Come back! You will be lost; you will be lost!" They wave their hand back, saying, "No danger; no danger!" Deeper down and deeper down until after awhile a wave sweeps them out and sweeps them off forever. Oh, come back! The one farthest away may come.

"Oh," you say, "you don't know where I came from. You don't know what my history has been. You don't know what iniquity I have plotted. I have gone through the whole catalogue of sin." My brother, I do not know the story, but I tell you this: The door of mercy is wide open. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Though you have been polluted with the worst of crimes, though you have been smitten with the worst of leprosies, though you have been fired with all evil passions, this moment on your brow, hot with iniquitous indulgences, may be set the flashing coronet of a Saviour's forgiveness.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR AUGUST 4.

Subject: Abram and Lot. Gen. xiii., 1-18. Golden Text. Matt. vii., 12—Memory Verses, 7-9—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

1. "Up out of Egypt." In the language of the Jew the direction to Jerusalem from every quarter was upward; besides, Egypt was a low-lying country and the traveler would have to ascend on his way to the hilly country of Canaan. "Into the south." Not the south of Egypt, but the southern region of Palestine. A certain part of the country was called the south before the times of the patriarchs.

2. "Very rich." Abram and Lot had both been greatly prospered and were very rich. The property of these times did not consist in flocks only, but also in silver and gold. Abram was very rich, and yet very religious. As piety is a friend to outward prosperity (1 Tim. 4: 8), so outward prosperity, if well managed, is an ornament to piety, and opportunity of doing so much the more good.

3. "Even to Bethel." Abram returns to the place of his altar in Bethel. In like manner Christian settlements cluster around their churches. Nothing can satisfy God, in reference to a wanderer or backslider, but his being entirely restored. "Between Bethel and Hai." Stanley well describes this point as a conspicuous hill, its topmost summit resting on the rocky slopes, and distinguished by its olive groves offering a natural base for the altar, and a fitting shade for the tent of the patriarch.

4. "Called on the Lord." This implies more than an ordinary prayer; he re-established public worship.

5. "Went with Abram." It seems plain that Lot was from the very beginning borne onward rather by Abram's influence and example than by his own faith in God.

6. "Not able to bear them." "Their flocks and herds had grown too numerous to find pasture there. An inability, moreover, of a moral kind may be implied." "Substance was great." As their families increased it was necessary their flocks should increase also, as from those flocks they derived their clothing, food and drink. Many also were offered in sacrifice to God.

7. "A strife." The occasion of their quarrel was their riches. The quarrel originated in the scarcity of herbage for the subsistence of their flocks, "and in their eagerness for the possession of the wells, or fountains of water, which in that rocky, and region have a value unknown to the inhabitants of a country like ours." "Dwell then in the land." The Perizzites are not mentioned in the table of nations, Chap. 10. Their origin is obscure. The Canaanites were the original occupants of the soil.

8. "Abram said." He first let Lot take his choice, and then left God to choose for him. This was heavenly wisdom. This is what faith ever does; it allows God to fix its inheritance, and is always satisfied with the portion which God gives. "No strife." There is a special danger of quarrels in the family and among kindred. The love of God in the heart is a sure cure for all strife. "We are brethren" (R. V.) We are of the same family, worship the same God in the same way, have the same promises, and look for the same end. Why then should there be strife?

9. "The whole land." The heavenly principle of forbearance evidently holds the supremacy in Abram's breast. He walks in the moral atmosphere of the Sermon on the Mount. It was an unselfish act for Abram to give up his rights and renounce his own interests for Lot. It was the act of a true man of God. "Separate from me." His proposal to separate arises from his love of peace, not from any selfish regard to his own interests.

10. "Lifted up his eyes." There is a crisis in every man's history at which it will assuredly be made manifest on what ground he is resting, by what motives he is actuated, and by what objects he is animated; thus it was with Lot. "Plain of Jordan." Lot chose the Jordan Valley north of the Dead Sea near the city of Sodom. Lot seems to have had nothing in view but his temporal convenience and advantage. He does not inquire into the character of the inhabitants, nor does he appear to express any reluctance in leaving Abram. "Before—destroyed." The face of the country was altered by the destruction of these cities. "Garden of the Lord." He knew of its fame as the garden of Eden; no crust of salt, no volcanic convulsions had as yet blasted its verdure.

11. "Lot chose him." The choice was selfish. He should have been generous toward his uncle, instead of greedily taking the best for himself, and then, the choice was made for worldly advantage without regard to spiritual things. "They separated." It is not thus with the riches of grace or of glory; the more we have of them the closer it unites us.

12. "Pitched—toward Sodom." He advanced toward it till he came near, but was probably prevented from entering by the well-known character of its inhabitants. He who keeps bad company, indulges in doubtful pleasures, or allows wrong and selfish acts to influence his life is pitching his tent toward Sodom.

13. "Wicked and sinners." The men of Sodom were sinners of the first magnitude. The greatest depravity is often found among the inhabitants of the most fertile lands. Lot has fallen into the very vortex of vice and blasphemy. Lot chose the company of sinners. One is safe with wicked men so long as he is endeavoring to make them good, but is never safe when he chooses their company.

14. "Look," etc. He is to make a full survey of the land in all directions, and he is assured that it is his to inherit, and a title deed is given to him for his seed forever. God says to every believer, look from the place "where thou art," and "the land"—the spiritual good, "which thou seest"—which thou dost see promised to thee in My word, "to thee will I give it."

15. "All the land." God repeats His promises for the support of the faith of His servant. "Will I give it." He who was willing to give up everything for the honor of God and religion received the blessing of the Lord, but he who sought this world lost all.

16. "Thy seed as the dust." That is, they shall increase incredibly, and, take them all together, shall be such a great multitude as no man can number.

17. "Walk through." Survey the land; enter and take possession of it for thyself and thy posterity.

18. "In Hebron." This is the first mention of this name; it was anciently Kirjath-arba. It is one of the most ancient cities in the world. Here Sarah and Abram died. "An altar." This was the third altar Abram had built. Lot might choose Sodom, but as for Abram he sought and found his all in God.

As for a universal language, such a one is being spread faster than the day-dreaming "Esperanto" enthusiasts can count. It is called English.

THE Convention having adopted the suffrage clause, there is a possibility of the conclusion of its herculean labors within a reasonable time.

THE Sampson Schley controversy is to be investigated by a court of enquiry. Three facts are certain—first, the Spanish were whipped; second, Sampson was in command of the fleet but was not on hand; third, Schley was on hand and executed the work in good style.

George F. Washburn, of Boston, president of the Commonwealth Club, of Massachusetts, sailed for Europe Tuesday. His mission is to inquire into the co-operative methods of various bodies in England, Belgium and Switzerland with a view to the formation of a $50,000,000 cotton combination in this country. According to an interview Mr. Washburn has worked out a plan to unite the cotton producers of the South into one great co operative trust with headquarters at St. Louis and central warehouses in Memphis. He said that the application of the idea to the cotton industry was made because the planters, being men of means, can unite in a co-operative business movement and effect a tremendous saving to themselves.

The Weekly Crop Bulletin says: «Conditions were generally favorable, except in northern counties, where hot and dry weather prevailed; in middle and southern counties, showers fell on several days, being copious in some places, and rather excessive in extreme southwestern counties, particularly so at Mobile. A general rain would be beneficial. Cotton is clear and generally healthy and, while small, is now making good growth and fruiting satisfactorily there are a few scattered reports of rust, mostly in southern counties; some cotton continues to die from «black root" or «root rot" in southeast portions of the State, but damage from these causes is of a local nature as yet. Early corn is maturing, but will make a light and inferior yield; late corn is growing nicely, and is now very promising; pulling of early fodder has commenced in a few fields, and will soon become general. Sorghum is beginning to head and promises a fair yield; cane, peanuts, field peas and sweet potatoes are generally doing well; gardens and Irish potatoes continue generally poor.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

By the overwhelming vote of 104 to 14 the Constitutional Convention yesterday, its fifty-eighth working day, adopted Section 4 of the Suffrage Article, which embraces the qualification for electors including "the grandfather clause." The minority report in opposition to "the grandfather clause" was tabled by a vote of 103 to 23. This brought to a close the greatest battle of the Convention, although the fight is expected on the Board of Registrars clause of the Article.

Governer Oates made an unsuccessful attempt to exclude deserters and descendents of deserters from the provisions of "the grandfather clause" but the amendment was defeated by a large majority.

The Convention was considering Section 5 of the Article when the hour of adjournment arrived yesterday afternoon.

The feature of the afternoon session was a sensational speech by Mr. Lowe of Jefferson, Chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee. He charged that the deliberate purpose of the Committee on Suffrage was to perpetuate fraud in Alabama elections and declared that the majority would need the minority before the Constitution was ratified.

Beginning today the Convention will meet each morning at 9 o'clock and will not adjourn in the evening until 7 o'clock. This resolution was adopted as a result of a compromise with the delegates who favored holding night sessions and the Convention will hereafter work one hour and a half longer each day.

MARRIED.

Wednesday evening, July 24, under a tree in the public road, near P. M. Moore's place, half mile south of Clanton, Judge Adams married Mr. Robert L. Marcus and Miss Lula J. Sorrell. We wish them much wedded joy.

On July 28, at the residence of Mr. W. F. Armstrong, Mr. A. H. Lovett and Miss Lula L. Armstrong were happily united, Rev. S. J. Jennings performing the ceremony. Long and happy may their united lives be.

Mr. John Green and Miss Maggie Ellis were joined in the holy bonds of matrimony on July 28 at Pletcher, G. W. Edwards, J. P. officiating. We wish the happy young couple a full measure of conjugal felicity.

At Mountain Creek, July 28, Mr. J. M. Stillwell and Mrs. Letha Norris were made man and wife, Rev. J. B. H. Parrish officiating on the happy occasion. Their friends wish their future lives together may be full of happiness.

Prosperity and the Economic Trend.

Prudent and careful management through a period of several years in which good crops and good prices have very generally prevailed, has wrought a marked transformation in the farming States of the Mississippi Valley. Mortgages have been so generally paid off that what was once the immense business of loaning Eastern money on Western farms has been almost entirely eliminated. The West itself has an ample amount of free capital; and nowadays when farmers wish to anticipate the future by borrowing money to make improvements they can find plenty of money in their own neighborhoods to be loaned at easy rates on good security. One result of these prevailing and favorable conditions of agriculture and business has been to dull the keen edge of popular interest in subjects related to the financial and industrial policy of the country. Great consolidations of railroad systems are going steadily forward under these prosperous conditions without exciting the amount of opposition from so-called anti-monopolists that movements of a far less significant and even revolutionary character were accustomed to provoke only a few years ago. The Wall Street panic of the early part of May seems not to have disturbed the actual business life of the country to any extent whatever. It checked for a time the spirit of wild speculation on the stock exchanges, and such a result was desirable rather than otherwise. More lately, the principal causes of speculative activity have been the reports that one railroad or another was about to be purchased for amalgamation with some larger system. In our next number our readers may expect to find from one or more especially competent contributors a summing up and review of what has actually taken place in the United States in the last two years in the direction of railroad consolidation. Each month, moreover, adds new chapters to the record. The re-making of the railroad map of America marks a great epoch in the history of transportation.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for July.

THE PAN-AMERICAN.

the time can put in several days pleasantly and profitably viewing the exhibits in the various buildings.

The electric building is wonderful to behold. The ordinance exhibit is superior to anything of its kind heretofore. The display of big guns, by the U. S. Government, Thousands of people view them, and watch with keen interest the illustrations of handling them in actual warfare.

There are several picturesque State and Foreign buildings but the most of them are used for the visitors.

Visitors to the exposition can secure rates at hotels and private houses, at reasonable prices. As in every other city there are hotels in Buffalo which charge high rates for accomodations, but of course the visitor can "pass them up" if he wants to and can live quite well at reasonable small cost.

Very respectfully,
DR. O. M. WISEHART.

Your druggist knows a good thing when he sees it. He always keeps Dr Tichenor's Antiseptic for sale because it is a good thing. He likes to sell it because it always gives perfect satisfaction.

Development of the Hammer.

Man's first tool was the uplifted hand grasping a stone, and from this came, after many years, the hammer. As heavier blows became necessary the hammer grew in size, until it was operated by machinery in the form of the tilt or belve hammer. When steam succeeded water as a motive power, a steam cylinder replaced the tripping cam, but the first half of the past century had nearly expired before the original form of this tool was at all changed by James Nasmyth's invention of the upright steam hammer.

Since then the falling weight of this design of tool has gradually been increased from a few hundred pounds up to 100 and even 125 tons, but excepting the smaller sizes up to 25 tons it has since 1890 been superseded by the hydraulic press, which by its slow motion produces a more thorough working of the metal. Presses have grown until the capacity of 14,000 tons was reached, requiring a 15,000 horsepower engine to drive it. Such a tool, with its accompaniment of 200 ton electric cranes for handling the work underneath, is capable of forging ingots over 75 inches in diameter and weighing more than 250,000 pounds.

Where Americans Are Modest.

The American is shy of proclaiming to the world his deepest sentiments and superstitions, if he has any. He prefers to take himself either as a joke or as a matter of business. Hence when he has a town to name he calls it "Smithville" or "New Bristol" or, as actually happened in the case of one town, "O. K." He may believe in a local ghost, he may love his wife, he may admire the view from his windows and pine when torn from the woods and mountains among which he passed his boyhood, but he does not want to put those emotions into the postoffice directory.—Washington Times.

Why He Didn't Go to Church.

A Scottish minister who was indefatigable in looking up his folk one day called upon a parishioner. "Richard," he said, "I hae na seen ye at the kirk for some time and wad like to know the reason."

"Weel, sir," answered Richard, "I hae three decided objections to goin—firstly, I dinna believe in bein whaur ye does a' the talkin; secondly, I dinna believe in sl' muckle singin, an, thirdly an in conclusion, 'twas there I got my wife."—Albany Argus.

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Then powders dry up the mucuous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. THE HOME GOLD CURE.

An Ingenious Treatment by which Drunkards are Being Cured Daily in Spite of Themselves.

No Noxious Doses. No Weakening of the Nerves. A Pleasant and Positive Cure for the Liquor Habit.

It is now generally known and understood that drunkenness is a disease and not weakness. A body filled with poison, and nerves completely shattered by periodical or constant use of intoxicating liquors, requires an antidote capable of neutralizing and eradicating this poison, and destroying the craving for intoxicants. Sufferers may now cure themselves at home without publicity or loss of time from business by this wonderful "HOME GOLD CURE" which has been perfected after many years of close study and treatment of inebriates. The faithful use according to directions of this wonderful discovery is positively guaranteed to cure the most obstinate case, no matter how hard a drinker. Our records show the marvelous transformation of thousands of Drunkards into sober, industrious and upright men.

WIVES CURE YOUR HUSBANDS!! CHILDREN CURE YOUR FATHERS!! this remedy is in no sense a nostrum but is a specific for this disease only, and is so skillfully devised and prepared that it is thoroughly soluble and pleasant to the taste, so that it can be given in a cup of tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking it. Thousands of Drunkards have cured themselves with this priceless remedy, and as many more have been cured and made temperate men by having the "CURE" administered by loving friends and relatives without their knowledge in coffee or tea, and believe today that they discontinued drinking of their own free will. DO NOT WAIT. Do not be deluded by apparent and misleading "improvement." Drive out the disease at once and for all time. The "HOME GOLD CURE" is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, thus placing within reach of every body a treatment more effectual than cures costing $25 to $50. Full directions accompany each package. Special advice by skilled physicians when requested without extra charge. Sent prepaid to any part of the world on receipt of One Dollar. Address Dept. HOOTING.

.. shots interrupted the
.. of the chancery court at ..le, Tenn., last Friday. When smoke cleared it was found that
..ree men were wounded, none seriously. The wounded are William Daniel, Sr., his son William Daniel, Jr., and F. G. Gilbert; George Gilbert, the fourth participant, escaped unhurt. All of the belligerents are attorneys. William Daniel, Jr., and F. G. Gilbert were opposing counsel in a case. Gilbert resented statements made by Daniel and at the conclusion of the case a quarrel arose during which Gilbert raised his arm. Quick as a flash Daniel opened fire at short range. Gilbert returned the fire, whereupon the shooting became general. Fifteen shots were exchanged before officers were able to interfere and great excitement prevailed.

TO SAVE HIS FRIEND.

A young man supposed to be Henry H. Armstead, of New York, stabbed himself in the region of the heart and gashed his throat with a pocket knife in the toilet room of a sleeping car on the south-bound Oregon Short Line express at Butte, Mont., in the depot Thursday morning. He staggered in from the toilet room of the sleeper, the blood streaming from his throat. Pointing dramatically at his companion he gasped: "Harry, I did this to save you," and fell unconscious. He was at once taken to the hospital. Fletcher refuses to say a word, evening declining to disclose his identity or that of his companion. It is said they are prominently connected and are recent graduates of an eastern university.

ROBBED AN OLD WOMAN.

Three masked men robbed Mrs. Margaret Koontz, of Midland, Md. She was sitting on her porch, listening to a band concert, when the robbers sprang upon her. They carried her some distance from the house, and throwing her into a clump of bushes, robbed her of nearly $300 and her jewelry. She was in the habit of carrying her valuables and money on her person, and her assailants were doubtless aware of this. Mrs. Koontz is a widow, 65 years old. She is in a critical condition as a result of the shock

THEY DON'T BELIEVE HER.

George A. Cruse, an employe of the East Coast brick yard, Jacksonville, Fla., was found dead Saturday in his house with a pistol by his side. His young wife, a handsome blonde, testified that her husband committed suicide suffering from insomia and depression. The coroner's jury, however, disregarded the wife's story and charged the crime of murder to W. A. Holt, commissary keeper for the company, who boarded with the Cruse company. Mrs. Cruse and Holt admit intimacy. Holt was held without bail.

A HEAVY ELECTRIC STORM

Passed over Indiana Wednesday morning: lightning struck eight residences but no fatalaties are reported.

SOMEWHAT APPROPRIATE.

The first occupation of Thomas Coleman Younger and Jas. Harden Younger, after twenty-five years in the Minnesota state prison, will be selling grave stones and monuments. A dealer named Peterson has contracted with the state for their employment and agrees to pay them $60 per month and not use them for advertisements.

BOILER EXPLODED.

A boiler exploded near Segar, O. T., Saturday afternoon, killing John W. Peters, Alfred White and Caleb Jones and injuring probably fatally Gus Ferguson and Dr. Jewett. Two others were also painfully hurt.

AN INHUMAN PARENT.

Amstrong Hensley of Johnston City, Tenn., has been landed in jail on the charge of murdering his five-year-old step-daughter. He brutally beat the child and threw her into a stream of water. She died a few hours later.

..ONVICT.

.. condemned to
..der of Deputy Sher-
..nd sentenced to hang made a dash for liberty afternoon at Monticello, Fla.,
a desperate fight, in which Dep-
..ty Sheriff R. H. Kilpatrick was wounded. He had gone to the death cell to give Williams his dinner. Williams had secretly removed the shackles from his ankles with a cold chisel furnished by unknown means, dashed out upon the officer, seized his pistol and ordered him to get into the cage. The officer sprung on the murderer and a fight ensued in which the officer was shot. Williams ran to the gate of the stockade, but could not get out. He then turned upon the deputy with a club, but was shot in the shoulders. Williams notwithstanding his wound, ran to another gate which was open and dashed into the street. The deputy followed shooting. After a chase of 100 yards Williams fell dead. Officer Kilpatrick's condition is critical.

FIRE DAMP

Exploded in Cincinnati's new water works tunnel Saturday noon and eight men were seriously injured and three narrowly escaped. Three saved themselves by diving into the water on seeing the flash. The other eight were badly injured and the damage to the tunnel was considerable. At any other hour more men would have been in the tunnel. The tunnel is 140 feet from the surface at the point of explosion, but the men were soon rescued.

THE RIGHT ONE DIED.

Angered because his wife refused to live with him, William J. Long, aged 25, a waiter at the Whist Club, Rochester, N. Y., shot his wife in the most cold-blooded manner Friday night. Although within two feet of her, the bullet failed to strike a vital spot, imbedding itself in the neck just below the base of the brain. Believing he had killed her, Long turned the weapon on himself, and sent a bullet through his brain, dying thirty minutes later.

TWO WERE KILLED.

A gravel train was wrecked Saturday morning eight miles north of Dayton, Ohio, resulting in the death of Orville D. Chase, Detroit, superintendent of the Chase Construction Company, and W. B. Gravell, Chicago, the engineer, and serious injury to four persons. The engine jumped the track while going down a steep grade, piling five loaded cars in a promiscuous heap alongside the road. Fourteen persons were aboard.

KILLED IN HIS STORE.

W. N. Parrott, a prominent merchant of Oneida, Tenn., was shot and killed Wednesday night, it is alleged, by James West. The tragedy took place while the two men were alone in a back room of Mr. Parrott's store and the cause is unknown. The dead man bore an excellent reputation and was a Mason of a high degree.

THE drought stricken districts of Texas, Kansas and Nebraska have been relieved by recent rains, and the corn, cotton and wheat crops are saved.

LIPTON'S new cup-challenger, the Shamrock II, is on her way across the Atlantic to try to win the historic cup.

THE registration for the Indian lands thrown open July 29, reached a total of 136,315.

THE new battle-ship Maine was successfully launched at the Cramp yards in Philadelphia, Saturday. She was christened by Miss Mary Preble Anderson, of Portland, Me., who broke on the prow a bottle of American wine, a novelty in launches.

A STEAMSHIP line has just been inaugurated between Chicago and Manchester, England.

ACT OF A MADMAN.

At Leavenworth, Kan., last Wednesday Michael Kelley, at one time in the insane asylum, shot six persons, killing one, probably fatally wounding another and more or less seriously wounding four others. He was himself finally killed by officers who tried to overpower him.

A YOUTHFUL PRISONER.

Peter Winston, ten years old, was sentenced Saturday at Portsmouth, Va., to five years in the penitentiary for murdering Chas. Wright, an 11 year old playmate.

Cruise Among the Fjords.

Queen Alexandria dearly loves the sea, and she has planned a yachting cruise among the fjords for her summer holiday. The king's engagements will forbid his accompanying her, but the Princess Victoria, and possibly the Princess Charles of Denmark, will share the trip.

New Stocks.

The new stocks are very chic. Those of white pique have tiny bows of colored lawn dotted with white, or white dotted with color. Instead of the tie crossing in the customary awkward fashion in the back a novel idea is introduced. The stock fastens in the back, and at one end the tie is stitched exactly in the middle. When the stock is fastened the ends of the tie are drawn around to the front and tied in a chic little bow. There are more lawn ties this season than ever before. The white ones with colored borders are very chic, and the colored ones with white borders are equally chic.

A Pretty White Waist.

An imported white waist is made rather prettily. The body of the waist is made of fine tucks, and the whole of the back where it buttons with small pearl buttons, is of the tucks. The front is tucked with the exception of the yoke, which is appliqued with rose-like lace flowers, in a lace which has the appearance of "val," set on at intervals. The fine nainsook of which the waist is made is cut out under the open centre of each flower. This square yoke is outlined with an inch band of tucking, and the straight standing collar is made of a row of the flowers with a row of tucking on either side. The sleeves are made of the tucking with two rows of the flowers on the plain white running the length of each sleeve, which is finished at the wrist with two rows of tucking with a row of the lace flowers between to match the collar.

For Wet Days.

Every woman should keep a short skirt for wet weather. It is not only far more convenient than a long one, but its appearance is better, for when hampered with an umbrella, and very likely also battling with the wind, it is impossible to hold up the skirt gracefully.

Women who value their health and their complexions will not stay in because the weather is rainy, but will dress suitably for the day and will take their usual outdoor exercise.

On those occasions when one cannot don a short skirt for a walk, it is good plan to loop up the skirt a little on the left side with a safety pin, and then by holding the other side with the hand, the skirt may be kept well out of the mud, without being held unduly high at any point, or being dragged to one side, in the very unbecoming manner one often notices among fair pedestrians on a rainy day.

The Summer Choker.

Chokers are really important features on gowns. As a rule they are close to the neck, and simple, but there is always an attempt to trim them in some original way. A pretty idea is a yoke of lace with the points of the lace making the bottom of the yoke. The same lace covers the straight choker, with the base of the choker defined with a line of velvet, making a little point in front. Above this are several more velvet lines that do not meet by several inches in front and end under little silver buttons. These small, flat buttons are used in various ways. On one silk choker are many rows of velvet sewed closely together. The choker is crossed at intervals of about three inches with rows of tiny gold buttons.

An example of an elaborate choker was a V of trimming set in under the chin. The rest of the choker is trimmed with rows of narrow ribbon, one row meeting under the V and the rest stopping on each side of it. In all these chokers trimmed with rows of velvet the trimming points down in front.

The narrow turnover collars of embroidered muslin that have been worn so long are replaced in a measure by a straight standup piece of muslin about which the stock is tied with a third of an inch of the embroidery showing at the top. There are not many bows worn under the chin, most stocks are being drawn down tightly, into a knot with flat ends.

Treatment of Freckles.

The fact that freckles are the usual penalty exacted by nature for the bestowal of a delicate complexion in no way compensates any daughter of Eve for their unwelcome presence. The poet may call them "the kisses of Apollo," but she prefers to dispense with the attentions of the sun god. Probably the least offensive and disfiguring of all skin blemishes, they are the most obstinate to remove. Dermatologists have tried in vain to compound a remedy which should be a permanent cure. It has yet to be found. True, they may be faded, even removed in many cases, after persistent treatment, but with the advent of the warm spring days and summer winds they are very apt to reappear. The summer girl inclined to freckle who yet justly refuses to be housed when sun, sky and sea woo her, has on hand a perpetual problem.

Freckles are divided into two classes, cold or constitutional freckles, and summer or light freckles. The latter fade gradually, or yield for a time, at least, to mild lotions. The former require almost heroic treatment, which then frequently brings disappointment. It is impossible truthfully to "guarantee" a freckle cure. The very situation of the freckle—below the surface—offers an obstacle. One difficulty in the way of their removal lies in the wide difference in the texture of different skins. A freckle lotion that will have no effect upon one's complexion will irritate and blister that of another.

The chief ingredient which enters into many freckle lotions is acid. An acid will bleach the spots when it reaches them. It must have usually something to draw them nearer to the surface. Ordinary massage of the face will do this gradually, and, by promoting the activity of the skin, in a manner prevent the small deposits of iron. Good facial circulation is a foe to most facial blemishes. The commonest acid and the most effective is lemon juice, pure or diluted, as the skin dictates.—Ledger Monthly.

New Ideas in Lingerie.

Some clever woman with capital and energy ought to start a laundry for expensive lingerie, where it would be treated with the tender care its beauty and costliness deserve. The need for such a place is less urgent than it used to be in one way, for the modern laundry, does not merit the anathemas that used justly to be hurled at its predecessors, but still there is a want felt. Every year strengthens the love women feel for dainty lingerie, a love which now is reaching a height of devotion.

Silk underwear is what many women like above all other kinds. It is held to be more healthy than lawn, though less so than wool. But, unfortunately, it does not launder well, and that must be a consideration. Now, therefore, numbers are ordering cambric robes de nuit, or, rather, robes de boudoir, for, while they will wear for the last chat before the fire the daintiest and loveliest nightdresses underneath their saut de lit, their actual sleeping garb is something less diaphanous. Of a verity occasions demand their correct toilet at every turn.

The most exquisite pattern for the robe de nuit to take is undoubtedly the empire, and some of those now sold might actually be gowns that were worn at the beginning of the 19th century, though then the belles actually walked out in them and must have looked truly nymph-like. The bodice part is closely insertioned with Valenciennes lace, and there are flounces of lace at the foot beneath a broad band of delicate tucks. A flat V-shaped collar, all insertioned and lace edged, trims the throat of some, though others are more correctly finished with a narrow "tucker" of lace. The sleeves are a great feature. They reach only to the elbows and are made simply of broad flounces of Valenciennes, with a little lawn to give them a fictitious substance. Such are called folly sleeves, and truly fascinating they are, as folly always is.

No one who is smart calls her dressing gown a dressing gown. The new name is French and is saut de lit. In this lovely and enveloping wrap the best models are made a la Josephine or a l'empire, to use a synonymous term, and soft silk composes them, with inlets of lace that suggest a high bodice and, again, full, lovely folly sleeves. But for the delicate and the cold a far more suitable fabric to cohose is zenana cloth, since it is silky, exquisitely becoming, of the most ravishing colors and very cosy. Then, too, less elegant, but in their way beautiful, are the dressing gown flannels sold, which, with insertions of lace, make charming wraps. Coarse lace is their prerogative, and it aims at a bold and striking effect.—Washington Star.

Gold effects on white are much fancied now for either day or evening wear.

Veiling of all sorts will undoubtedly continue to be the rage throughout summer.

Black and white and blue is a very good combination this year. In hats they should be worn with corresponding combinations.

Scent bottles for tarveling come in leather cases, which keep them from being scratched or broken when carried in a traveling bag.

Children never look prettier than in bright red hats, and these are always good trimmed with field flowers. Trimmed with black they are also stylish.

"Floppy" soft hats are pretty with the rim softly falling in its natural way and then trimmed with a wreath of flowers with a bow of black velvet in the back.

Something extremely practical to keep erect the dainty muslin and pique stocks now so much worn is a perforated neckband of cellulod. It is easily fastened inside the stock.

A pretty little hat is of blue straw trimmed with daises. It must be worn with a gown, which it will suit. Daises, the field flowers, are not good form with elaborate or dress toilets.

Some stylish frocks lace down the back with ribbon through large eyelet holes, the holes growing larger and further apart and the ribbons wider as they descend, until finally there is a finish with a bow just above the flare of the skirt.

SURGERY WITH A MATCH.

Painless Operation That Surprised a Clerk in a Book Shop.

An aged, well-dressed man, with white side whiskers and a general appearance of substantial prosperity and eminent respectability, stepped into the retail store on Fifth avenue of a book publisher the other day and asked one of the young clerks in a confidential undertone:

"Have you a match?"

"Certainly, sir," replied the young man, producing a handful of lucifers from his vest pocket, "but you will permit me to say that it is against the rules to smoke in this shop."

"Oh, that's all right," replied the old gentleman, amiably. "I never smoke." With that he began to fumble in his pockets. Not finding what he wanted, he asked the clerk for the loan of a knife. Then he lit the match, blew it out immediately and began to sharpen the burned end into a point.

"Ah, I see you need a toothpick," remarked the clerk, as he watched the whittling process.

The old gentleman made no reply, but when he had put a nice point to the match he again spoke.

"Perhaps," he said, "you have a quiet place where I could sit down for a few moments without being observed?"

The clerk, wondering what the old gentleman might ask for next, politely led the way to a corner of the store fitted with easy chairs for the benefit of such patrons of the firm as might want to glance over a book before buying it. The old gentleman sat down and without a moment's hesitation rolled up the left leg of his trousers to a point above the knee. Then, using the back of the knife as a hammer, with a few well-directed blows he drove the match into his knee. Then, readjusting his trousers, he handed the knife back to the astonished young man and said:

"I am very much obliged to you. You see I have a wooden leg, and one of the pins holding it together fell out. The match will do very nicely until I can get home. If you happen to be over in Newark and have anything the matter with your leg, just step into my office and I shall be glad to assist you."

Then, as he handed the clerk a card bearing the name of a prominent financier in Newark, he smiled, bowed politely and walked out.—New York Times.

Just This Side of the Laurels.

One of the most pathetic sights is to see a man giving up the struggle to be down when just in sight of success. Of course, many people are side-tracked or hindered in the race through no fault of their own, but the vast majority of those who cease to climb and give up do so from some weakness or defect. Many of them lack continuity of purpose or persistency; others lack courage or determination.

It is really pitiable to see young men and women in the prime of life becoming discouraged and ceasing to advance. Many of these unfortunates would attain at least something of real success by merely sticking to their tasks, but there is no hope whatever for the man who gives up—the one who loses heart.

In thousands of American homes—lying, perhaps, in the attic, woodshed—are scores of ingenious, labor-saving devices, or inventions, which, if carrier a step further and patented would not only give those who originated them a competence for life, but would also enrich the civilization of the world. But the thinkers get discouraged or tired, or lack persistency, energy, or push; and so the half-developed machinery, the embryo invention, has never come to light, and the time spent upon it has been lost, perhaps worse than lost, because the lesson of perseverance was not sufficiently learned.—O. S. Marden, Success.

The Barber's Deflections.

A Birmingham barber was cutting the long, curly, profuse locks of a young man who has some pretensions to being literary, and occasionally poses before his friends as a great genius.

With a supercilious smile and words that could be heard all over the room, the young man inquired: "I say, barber, what makes a man grow bald?"

The barber snapped his scissors once or twice and ran the comb through his beard.

"Well," he answered slowly, "if a man has got lots of brains and is a deep thinker, he generally gets bald. That, they say, leads to it every time."

Several of the customers looked at the young man's luxuriant crop and smiled rather broadly. The young man, however, did not exactly see the joke. So, pretty soon, when the barber was running his fingers over the curly locks, he tempted fate again.

"I say," he asked, "do you think my hair will come out and I'll get bald?"

The man of the scissors paused reflectively, and then, in a tone as if he was delivering a judicial decision, announced:

"No; I don't think you stand in any danger of getting bald."

Then the crowd laughed and the barber looked surprised.—Tit-Bits.

Protected Frogs' Nests.

There is a tree-frog in Brazil that builds in the water a sort of fortification for its nest. Starting at the bottom of the pond it erects a circular, tube-like wall of mud, which, at the top, projects above the surface of the water and looks not unlike the crater of a miniature volcano. In the water thus inclosed the eggs are laid, and when the little frogs are hatched they are protected from their enemies until they are old enough to take care of themselves. In the meantime, it is said, the old frogs remain close by, as if on guard.

THE BIRMINGHAM SHIPPERS

WANT RAILROAD COMMISSION ELECTED BY PEOPLE.

THEY QUOTE SOME STARTLING FIGURES

The Constitutional Convention Has Been Besieged With Similar Petitions—The Georgia Law Compared and Citations Made.

The Birmingham Freight Bureau is seeking to have the state railroad commissioners elected and paid by the people, has prepared a petition for presentation to the constitutional convention.

The petition rehearses one which was presented to the convention by the Birmingham Board of Trade, the Wholesale Grocers' Association and the Freight Bureau. With the former petition was submitted also a letter by Colonel Trammell, late president of the Georgia railroad commission, to the president of the Texas commission, showing the benefits of their commission after thirteen years' trial.

The new petition says that without attempting to reply to either, "Col. J. M. Falkner, District Attorney and political manager of the L. & N. Railroad Co., through the Montgomery Journal, made a general denial to both papers, defending his client, the L. & N., claiming that the Georgia rate is not a proper criterion and characterizing the Trammell letter as in his belief a spurious manuscript.

The petition answers Col. Falkner recognizing his duty to his client, the L. & N., and appreciating his legal ability and his great value to the state as a strong and loyal citizen, but it cross-claims to the colonel's arguments and presents figures which must have escaped the colonel's notice.
